The appalling Hindu ven-geance being exacted from the Sikh community in India after the assassination of Mrs Indira Gandhi continued yesterday at a somewhat lower level. But a new horror came to light as trains, which had been travelling overnight, began to arrive in the Delhi area.

As they rolled in, mobs of hooligans halted them, boarded the carriages and killed any Kikhs they found. At least 28 died on trains bound for the capital. Another 26 were killed at small stations in Haryana state nearby.

Similar events took place at the palatial Charbagh railway station in Lucknow, capital of Uttar Pradesh, Police opened fire to disperse the mob hounding the Sikhs, but not before two were killed and 12 injured, some seriously. Later, 50 Sikhs were given shelter at the police station.

The number of deaths in the nationwide intercommunal incidents in the past three days has risen to 500, according to news agency estimates. The United News of India reported that 250 of the dead were in

NCB encourages pre-Christmas return to work

The Nanonal Coal Board last night stepped up its campaign to win over striking miners by presenting the blunt message that there will be no further concessions and urging a return

A special issue of the board's newspaper Coal News is being delivered to the homes of all 180,000 miners and in the meantime the board is highlighting the financial advantages of returning to work before Christmas within the next two weeks which would allow striking miners to qualify for lump sum payments of up to £650. Suggestions earlier in the day that the board was preparing to offer a £650 "Christmas bonus" to induce strikers to return to work produced strong protest from working miners in the Midlands and led the board to quickly issue a clarification that the payments represent a collection of allowances including holiday payment which are normally paid.

The managers' union is critical of the handling of the Michael Eaton affair and Mr Wilson said the last straw was the treatment of Mr Geoffrey Kirk the director of public relations, a BACM member, who was sent on leave and is expected to take early retirement.

A Christmas pay "bonanza" depends on miners returning to work by November 19 at the latest and working four full weeks. The main components are payments for holidays, Bank holidays and agreed rest days which amount to about £300. There would be a further payment of £100 which would represent back pay on the annual pay award, but that is dependent on the National Union of Mineworkers accepting the 5.2 per cent offer.

The payout would also include the £70 annual Christmas bonus and the £650 would apply to top-earning face workers. Other underground In a separate development workers would get £544 and top surface workers £571.

Convicted killer struck again after 26 years

John Spriggs, a killer who escaped being hanged with a last minute reprieve, struck again 26 years later.

He battered Mrs Margaret Larkin to death with a steam iron before killing himself with an overdose of pain killers. An inquest jury in Cardiff yesterday returned a verdict of unlawful killing on Mrs Larkin, aged 53, and a verdict of suicide on Spriggs, aged 56. The former fireman was sentenced to death in 1957 after shooting a barman in a public house in Birmingham. But two days before he was due to hang his sentence was commuted to life imprisonment.

He was released on Licence in 1978 and moved to Cardiff to stay with Mrs Larkin.

The inquest was told the the pair had frequent arguments. A suicide note was found beside Spriggs body.

Lost son's £850,000 for charity

The £850,000 left by a mother to her missing air gunner son in the belief that he was still alive is to go to animal charity a High Court judge decided yesterday. Mrs Evelyne May Green, who lived at Boroughbridge, North York-shire died, aged 90, on February

She believed that her son, Peter, whose Halifax bomber failed to return from a raid on Berlin in 1943, would come back one day. In her will, she requested that, if he had not returned by the year 2020, the money should be used to fight animal cruelty.

Mr Justice Nourse granted her trustees permission to give the money to animal charities immediately. Seven relatives who had challenged the bequest will get nothing.

But the order preserves the right of the son, if he is still alive, to come forward and claim the money.

Home sale deals 'must have safeguards'

By Christopher Warman Property Correspondent

Many housebuyers would ike to be able to use a complete housing package provided by a building society, but such a system must have safeguards. Mr Jeremy Mitchell, director of the National Consumer Council, said yesterday.

He welcomed the "convenience and increased competition" that building societies could offer with such packages, but said that consumers must be protected from any conflict of interest.

Mr Mitcheil, addressing the South and East Association of Building Societies at Eastbourne, doubted whether building societies should be allowed to provide estate agency

Ethnic voters: The Jews

Nerves jarred by religious rhetoric

From Our Own Correspondent

President Reagan's embrace of the religious Right in this campaign has cost him many Jewish votes. Jews are particularly sensitive about church-state separation and many have been made nervous by the religious rhetoric and imagery of the Republicans.

The President has sought to repair the damage by emphasizng his strong support for Israel. He has also tried to divert and more of them marry attention from the Christian fundamentalist pitch he made at the Republican convention in Dallas by stressing the conven-

Within minutes of her death yesterday, reporters among the 16 witnesses emerged trembling and sweating to face a barrage of microphones and describe in minute detail how Mrs Barfield was put to death.

"You could see the tension in her neck muscles," a young woman journalist said, guiping, "She was breathing fairly rapidly when she was wheeled into the room, but she seemed to gain control of that and relax, about five minutes in. You could see the chest moving up and down . . . there was no jerking. You could see the colour draining from her face, ash grey.

A man said: "Her mouth moved very quickly, she seemed to be saying something, she wet her lips and then became very still. She had her head turned, so we could not clearly see her face." One of the reasons Mrs Barfield chose lethal injection in preference to gas was that she did not want to sit in a chair and face a crowd of people as she died.

A prison official announced that the execution was smooth pronounced Mrs Barfield dead 15 minutes after the drugs were administered. Her son came to the microphones to say his mother had wanted to live.

Unesco and Britain: Part 1

Biting the hand that feeds

Within two months Britain has to decide whether to follow the United States out of Unesco. In the first two articles, David Walker looks at how, after years of threats and bluster, the troubled United Nations agency may finantly be forced into a fundamental reappraisal. A mysterious fire set to estroy financial documents, a black potentate, espionage, exchange rate speculations high life at the taxpayers Villain of the piece in most accounts of Unesco is its black Director-General, Mr Amadou Mahtar M'Bow. He is Seneglase, Muslim, a prize product of Francophone Africa, 45,7 master of what Richard Hoggart called the "enclosed Byzantine system" of Unesco's Parisian byzantrage.

. He has more than folfilled the aspirations of the Third World countries that 10 years ago were agitating for a non-white to head one of the UN's specialized agencies. There are jobs: Haiti, Ghana, India and Algeria have joined the nations diplomacy - Britain and France - among the countries significantly over-represented on Unesco's staff.

There are policies. Where once Unesco was symbolized by literacy programmes and the rescue of Nubian monuments from the Nile, Mr M'Bow's tenure has seen emphasized the construction of "new world orders" consisting, as far as can be gauged, mainly of conference papers and anti-

But Mr M'Bow inherited his extraordinary personal powers from his French predecessor, M Rene Maheu, and from a constitution put together in a post-war glow by British idealists. Unesco's problems organizational: in common with other UN agencies, it sacrifices efficiency to representative-ness. Its fiscal arrangements depend on a formula aligning population and gross national product which results in the United States carrying the lion's share, but the voting strength - one state or statelet per vote - lies with the minimal contributors (see table).

The business efficiency argument against Unesco has now been encapsulated in a 177page report by the General ng Office, a branch of the United States Congress. It strongly criticizes the manage-ment of staff and money, confirms suspicious that budgets are put together by throwing pieces of paper in the air and seeing how they fall, and says Unesco is top heavy with administrators and excessively centralized.

More telling than the efficiency arguments in the American decision to withdraw (the United States withheld

8,000-word denial by Packer From Tony Duboudin

Mr Kerry Packer, the head of Australian Consolidated Press, Philharmonia/ yesterday strongly denied alle-gations by the Costigan Royal Commission that he was linked with organized crime and a possible murder. In a 13-page, 8,000-word document, Mr Packer described the commission's report as a "dishonest and malicious document". He said he had not financed a film tax avoidance scheme, and had not been involved in financing drug transactions or in the alleged murder of a Queensland bank manager, Mr Ian Coote. The Queensland police have reopened the investigation into Mr Coote's death as a result of the report, which said Mr Frank Costigan QC, who headed the commission, was convinced that Mr Coote was murdered.

The commission report, on the activities of the Ship's Painters and Dockers Union, said major inquiries were warranted into matters relating to Mr Packer, including suspected murder.

Mr Packer's statement yesterday also denied that he had ordered the removal of a file to Singapore to fraustrate Mr Costigan's inquiry. He said that with this statement, and the one he issued in September after publication of 42 summaries from the commission in the National Times magazine, he had answered every allegation against him and proposed to say no more. Mr Packer's statement included a strong attack on Mr Costigan, saying he had made many errors of fact. It began: "Mr Costigan has concluded his Royal Commission as unjustly as he conducted it. . He has disgraced the Institution of Royal Commissions and his own profession as a lawyer.

"The Costigan report has indelibly demonstrated that substantial power invested in a person prepared to use it in a warped, arbitrary and unprincipled way can decimate individual rights and totally override basic principles of justice."

Stephen Poliakoff returns to the theatre after a three-year absence when Breaking the Silence opens at the Pit on Tuesday. Interview by Bryan Appleyard

The new land for a restless writer

There has been something grimly predictable about the publicity generated by Stephen Poliakoff, "Royal Court play by 19-year-old", it begins, moving on to "Playwright prodigy", to be followed inexorably by "Stephen Poliakoff is irritated with being labelled the Boy Wonder of the theatre."

After 13 years of that where exactly is Poliakoff?

Unfortunately, it is not an angle he is entirely happy to go along with: "Should one think about one's position at any time? Isn't that very destructive? Writing should be a process of getting on with it and doing it."

To Poliakoff his headlong and prolific progress - writing plays such as City Sugar, television such as Caught on a Train and films such as Runners - is unamazing

"It's the energy that matters. I know it takes energy to write a novel. But a novelist can fall into a rhythm. Novels are quite long and plays are quite short and it's a question of capturing one particular thing. That's why playwrights stop. You can't get into a rhythm unless, like Ayckbourn, you have to write for your own company and your

"I'm trying to forestall people using those terms by using them myself. Rather a silly ploy really." Poliakoff is not one to be pinned down

But at the centre of all his work lies the conviction that people should not be cafegorized, that we should not be crushed into thinking in straight lines. And so to Breaking the Silence, his second play to be premiered by the Royal Shakespeare Company, which opens at the Barbican on Tuesday.

It is about the precarious process of the release of human creativity and energy and it is based on the experiences in immediately post-revolutionary Russia of Poliakoff's paternal grandfather and his family, Bot it is not - much waving of thumbs and writhing - repeat NOT a family memoir.

The biographical events are small part of the urge to write the play. I don't want the audience wondering what's true and what isn't. It's just that when you take something that's quite close to you you have to reboil it to make it into a

The use of that brief, creative era in Russia before Stalinism intervened is also significant for Poliakoff's work because of its contrast with the usual cultural background of his drama. In Breaking the Silence the environment is vibrant, alive and dangerous, but at least it offers the opportunity for human contradictions and ambiguities to be embraced and stimulated. In his "urban canyon" plays his characters find themselves

Next year, France hopes to launch its first: television satellite, which would enable viewers to receive a further four channels. However, many feel that it is not so much more channels as better quality that is needed in French television. A recent poll showed that only 39 per cent of viewers are satisfied with their television ammes, compared with 75 per cent who are satisfied with the radio.

It has yet to be seen whether the new channel's financial independence from the Government will enable it to provide a more adventurous and critical coverage of the news.

concerto performances have changed rapidly. In place of the full-size orchestra with conductor and dutiful soloist, the orchestra these days is likely to be slimmed down and the pianist will himself direct in (the theory goes) the eighteenth-century manner. Vladimir century manner. Ashkenazy took that course on Thursday with the Philharmonia, having some justification for dispensing with a separate conductor in that he was himself the conductor of the rest of the concert. The piece he played, the fresh, expherant E flat Concerto K271, has been much heard recently: Perahia did it in similar fashion with the ECO, and Bilson has recorded it own feeling is that the group ought to be small enough for the soloist to be able to direct without his fingers ever leaving the keys: that is to say, he should power the performance from within by playing con-tinuo throughout and restraining the hand-waving. Things may have happened comparatively slowly eight centuries ago, but contrary to popular supposition souls were just as sensitive and emotions ran just as deep as today. Few groups dedicated to the music of that time mangage to perform it with the subtlety achieved by Sequentia, the Cologne-based group who on Thursday began an Early Music

Network tour.
The ensemble's music-making in a programme called "Love and Lamentation in Medieval France", was charged with an improvisatory flavour which gave the lie to the theory that such music is only esoteric, though neither did the three performers stoop to sensationalizing their material. Much of the evening was structured around the figure of Marie, Countess of Champagne. Other effects suffer too: in place of a witty emergence of the piano from the tutti texture there is a simple piano-orches-tra contrast which is too plain. But all this is not to deny that Ashkenazy makes the very best of his chosen instrument and performance style, cultivating a particularly crisp bass line in the delicious hand-crossing of K271, and interrupting the racy figurations of the finale for a most eloquent, yearning min-uet. It is just that the notion of the soloist-as-conductor does not really get us much nearer the probable practice of Mozart's time or the composer's understanding of the concerto. Still, the Philharmonia seemed happy with the arrangement and were on good form all evening. Delius's On hearing the first cuckoo in spring was fairly somnolent, but Dvorak's "New World" Symphony was rousing and effective - in all honesty, it is not much of a symphony and cannot hold a candle to Dvorak's Eighth, but if it is to work it should be done as Ashkenazy did it, with enormous good humour and spontaneity, so that the tunes flow as if freshly minted and the

Two Planks and a

Passion Greenwich

The merry middle ages have not had much theatrical attention since the heyday of Christopher Fry, and on the face of it, Anthony Minghella's account (first seen at Exeter last year) of a royal party gate-crashing the York Mystery cycle in 1392 is just the kind of airy fiction that evaporated with The Lady's Not for Burning.

As in Fry, a smelly epoch makes a deodorized come-back: there is a similar reliance on charming anachronism, and the stealthy return of a Christian message under a playfully inconsequential surface. There, however, the resemblance comes to an end, as Two Planks and a Passion turns out to be a robustly well-plotted piece whose graceful style is the least of its points of interest.

Its comic mainspring is the rivalry between the Major of York and the master of the York and the master of the emptily gilded spectacle plays to Painters' Guild which comes to a descried street. Rankov and when the Oxford and Cambridge Joint Blues Committee meets on Thursday to discuss the vexed question of boat race eligibility. They will eat a steak lunch with the future of the boat race at stake. The meeting is a knock-on from the row over Boris Rankov, who won his sixth rowing blue for Oxford in 1983 when part-student and part-don. The universities had adopted totally opposed positions on the issue.

Cambridge says that increasing postgraduate participation wrecks an undergraduate's chance of winning a blue, which is a had thing. Oxford says that what with the growing umber of women undergraduates, increasing postgraduate partici-pation is the only way to keep rowing standards high, which is a good thing Comparative standards have slithered drastically in other sports, but not yet in rowing.

The committee will debate a compromise agreement which has been in force since October-last year and which, though it is intended to prevent another Rankov, still gives the energetic a theoretical oppor-tunity to win eight blues. As the agreement stands, it satisfies neither party. Meanwhile hostilities commence on the water this weekend, when both universities contest the Fours Head of the River race.

Filly buster

The choosing of any horse's name has to be undertaken with care; naming a splendid daughter of Alydar has given rise to inordinate humming and hawing. But after a series of scintillating gallops, the decision was finally made to saddle the filly with the fate-tempting-name of Alydar's Best. Since assuming the name, she has appeared twice on the sace course, and has two victories to show for it. Trainer David O'Brien, who won this year's Derby with ecreto, is aiming her at the 1985 Derby. She will have to be genuinely superlative to do that - the last filly to win the Derby was Fifinella in 1916. Only five other fillies have done it since the race was first run in 1780. Alydar's Best is currently 32-1.

Thigh of relief

Officials with the British women's handball team were surprised at the interest generated in Jordan by their recent tour, since an earlier men's tour had revealed no lurking lordanian passion for the game. But at an international match they not only attracted a capacity crowd, but riot police were needed to keep back the crowds when the girls took off their tracksuit bottoms to play in their usual short shorts; the Jordanian team play with tracksuit bottoms firmly in place. The British team had to be locked up in the changing room until the crowd had dispersed, and required a 24-hour police guard throughout the tour.

The great fallacy of people who rush into print and say the BBC should take advertising is that they don't look into the matter in depth and see what actually happens if you start going down that slippery slope.

The advertising agency, D'Arcy-MacManus & Masius, believes that if the BBC took a small amount of advertising, 15 seconds an hour initially, the licence fee could be pegged at £46 for several years. Isn't this reasonable?

It is a very attractive argument. It would be better if it was founded on fact. The actual amount required, supporting their argument, would be at least 1 minute 20 seconds. That's a straightforward financial argument. They've got the wrong figures. But that does not go to the root of my objection to advertising. Talk to ABC, CBS and NBC in America and schedules. The person with the loudest voice, the person who takes the final decision, is the president of talent side of television that decides, ITV has a monopoly, thank heavens, of raising money from advertising. So when it comes to prime time it isn't competitive in the sense of what is being shown. Theirs are the only channels showing advertising so the sales department, quite rightly, has absolutely no say in the scheduling of what the public sees. If we were competitive I dread to think what would happen. Ultimately the sales department would be driving the

So I would like to see how the BBC could put on a promenade concert on BBC1 on Saturday night at prime time if it needs to sell advertising. changing. We're thinking all the time. How I believe the licence fee should be improved from the public's point of view is that we should hope that the Government would agree to broadening the base.

The first-thing I would like to see is the introduction of a car radio tax. There are approximately 17 million vehicles in the country today, and of these I believe more than 10 million have radios installed. If the Government were to agree to a car radio licence fee of £10 a year that would produce £100m. It would be a very easy tax to collect. Where the road fund is £90 you would simply make it £100. You would simply have a different colour coding (on the licence), red or green, or have an R on it, and when the police do their anti-evasion campaign if the car has an aerial it has one colour tag, if it doesn't, it has another. It would affect a market which is not actually underprivileged. I believe 70 per cent of cars are registered in the names of companies, so it doesn't affect the individual. The 30 per cent regis-tered in the names of individuals by and large are the middle class and

. In time I would like to see a television licence, not a household licence. I happen to have four sets in my home. I don't actually believe I should pay the same amount as the deprived one-parent family living in one room with one set. That would start to iron out the differences in society. I'm not saying it's easy, but would be more equitable.

What would you say to people who never watch the BBC or listen to it on their car radios? Statistics shows that there are far that every week over 90 per cent of

I believe it has got to cover the totality of interest, apart from the charter responsibilities to inform, to educate, and to entertain. It is about quality programmes for minoritity interests and popular programmes that are quality.

Do not think for a moment that I am saying that the ITV companies aren't doing a very good job. But I say they do it because we are here. The South Bank Show is the result of the BBC spending £150m on arts programmes, and £7m on mu-sicians. If you're going to tell me as chairman of the BBC that I have to raise £700m from advertising then I can't have River Journeys, I've got to have Blankery Blank, and you're going to end up with wall-to-wall saleable programmes. saleable programmes.

How can the public be satisfied with the result of the independent efficiency audit on the HBC ordered by the Home Secretary when you were allowed to choose the firm which is carrying out the report?

We were given the choice of three firms. But the independence and integrity of those firms is such that the report they produce will be totally independent and I do not expect that report to be a whitewash on behalf of the BBC. In fact I am hopeful that it is going to produce things that will enable us to make aiterations. I wouldn't suggest that we're perfect. I think we're bloody good. But there is fine timing. How much of the problem is I think that within the industry there are certain manning practices which have developed that are less than desirable. But what I do know for a fact is that any manning difficulties that there are within the BBC are nothing as compared to the manning difficulties in commercial television. There was a time in the BBC when we averaged four people per transmitter. Today we have half a person, one man covers two transmitters. That is because the technology is so advanced that we have been able to make redundancies, and they have all been made. I'm talking about hundreds of

You own the BBC, and as the owner of the BBC you are entitled to expect excellence. We've got to live up to that expectation, so I don't mind that criticism at all.

Your fears about the effects of advertising on the BBC can be justified only if the appropriate regulatory bodies allow the Corporation and the commercial network to follow a decline into downmarket standards. Surely what we need is not less competition in broadcasting, but more competition backed by tighter regulation?

Woodrow Wyatt What the Colonel wants of Scargill hypocritical" to attack Mr Scargil for dealing with Colonel Gaddafi. The National Coal Board through its subsidiary Compower, under con-tract to the Libyan government, has been teaching Libyans English and computer skills. If it is all right, Benn argues, for the coal board to have financial relations with Colonel Gaddafi, why is it not all right for Mr Benn could have added that we have considerable trade with Libya, sending that country far more exports than we receive in return. We trade with South Africa, Russia. Iron Curtain countries and all manner of unsavoury dictatorships.

Why, therefore, should Scargill be condemned by Mr. Kinnock, who described the country as vile and said that any Libyan money given to the miners was "an insult"?

Letters in The Times indicate sympathy with this viewpoint. Examples are given of British Telecom and British Steel going to Libya to sell their services. It is not merely the coal board which is agreeable to training Libyans: almost any organization in Britain is Libyans: willing to take money from Libya whether for goods or technical help. So long as the Government allows this, and is pleased with the contribution it makes to our balance of payments, why should Libya be out of bounds to Mr Scargill?

The reason is this. Colonel Gaddafi pays for goods and services. What were the services that Gaddafi thought he was buying from some leaders of the NUM, who had not consulted the rest of their executive on their approach to him? They could not have been offering to train coal miners, or to supply expertise on how to run trade unions and organize strikes

There are no trade unions in Libya in any sense which would be recognized by the TUC. There were some before King Idris was deposed by Gaddafi. He dissolved them. Now there are People's Committees created by the Colonel which owe total allegiance to the government. They do not negotiate working conditions or pay. They are political cadres keeping the people in line and acting as informers.

Strikes are forbidden. Any strike is regarded as a strike against the people and is punishable by death. There have been no pay rises for three years. Mr Scargill is not naive, as is sometimes suggested. He knows all this very well. He knows that any money ostensibly offered by nonexistent Libyan trade unions which have no money is money from the Libvan government

The Daily Mirror last Tuesday published the transcript of the conversation which Colonel Gaddafi had with Roger Windsor, the NUM chief executive. The paper got it from the Libyan Television and Jana, the official Libyan news agency. Mr Windsor began: "Thank, you for receiving me at such short notice, and for allowing me to make representations to you on behalf of came from the NUM side, not from Colonel Gaddafi, Mr Windsor then proceeded with a lurid account of repression against striking miners. The number of casualties so far reached is five dead in addition to 30,000 injured and 8,000 imprisoned in British jails . . . "

This repression it seems, included our president, Arthur Scargill, who was beaten by the British police". Colonel Gaddafi was further informed that "miners' families are a target of hunger and hardship. eaching the extent of their inability to feed their children and bury their dead": At the end of this moving speech Mr Windsor made the appeal

"We need all the money that you can send us through the Libyan trade unions."

Colonel Gaddafi replied with warmth and sympathy and assured the NUM of "Libya's solidarity in their struggle to gain their legitimate rights. Finally I can confirm that the Libyan trade unions will contribute substantial cash to enable you to win your struggle against Mrs Thatcher, the American lackey. We shall make sure the money is sent to you into a foreign bank account."

Gaddafi: he too wants to see Mrs Thatcher overthrown

Colonel Gaddafi was not promising the money because he is a compassionate man: his name does not appear high on the list as a contributor to saving starving children in Africa. The Colonel was promising the money for the same reason he gives it to the IRA: he aims at maximum dis uption in countries hostile to his brand of dictatorial socialism.

That is the service he wants from Mr Scargill. If Gaddafi could help prolong the strike he would be delighted at any damage it caused Britain and her government. We must assume that the Colonel is not interested in the handsome offers made by the NCB to the executive of the NUM.

The Colonel sees in Scargill a man of similar outlook. Both believe that as a means of getting your way violence is preferable to the ballot box. On June 27, speaking at a Communist Party rally called Marx with Sparks, Scargill said: "I don't accept we are landed for the next four years with this government", and called for "working people to take extra-parliamentary activity to defeat the Tories". Both leaders believe in a very rough kind of socialism, so long as they are running it. Mr Scargill is the man who said of Poland: "I am opposed to Solidarity because I believe it is an anti-socialist organization, whose desire is to overthrow the socialist

Mr Scargill is an avowed Marxist who has several times said that the object of his is to overthrow the government. Gaddafi, also, would like to see Mrs Thatcher overthrown. The two are natural allies, although I acquit Mr Scargill of any desire to engage in the type of terrorist murders which are Gaddaf-

s speciality. Mr Scargill was clearly surprised that people did not realize his affinity with Gaddaff, that they have not yet understood his politics. His first reaction on the Libyan disclosure was, "Our union welcomes any financial contribution from trade unions anywhere to support our campaign" Aid to striking miners has come from Russia and Iron Curtain countries but these countries, so far as we can judge, are not helping the IRA or murdering policewomen in St James's Square.

Guys and ghouls come out to prey

Wednesday night was unexpected. Too early for Christmas carols, our neighbour had already borrowed the radiator key, we had had the day's evangelical visit, the man had already called offering primula plants, and Friends of the Earth were due for their bundles of newspapers next Wednesday. Who could it be?.

"Hello. Trick or treat", said the little girl. "Hello", we said. "No thank you", and tried to close the

All was made clear when Victoria came home the next morning after spending the night with a friend.
"We went to play trick or treat", she said happily. "I got 50p." It transpired that Victoria and her friend had got into some scruffy clothes and gone round to see another friend round the corner. That friend's parents had paid up the treat. What would the trick have seen any guy at all on the pavements outside the stations and by the bus stops. Pathetic little bundles of rags soliciting a financial celebration of the death of Guy Fawkes seem to have given way, in some parts, to little children dressed frightfully, or to frighten, or both. Everyone is doing it, said Victoria.

"Well, we don't know really. We would have said or done or sung omething nasty, I suppose.

Victoria, except when goaded beyond endurance by her brothers, never does any of those things. Except, apparently, on this particu-lar night. That seems to be the war they do things in America on Hallowe'en.

Maybe, but the American tra-dition, I am told, is to do it for sweets or biscuits. One of her goading brothers. Edward, is too old for children's games, and sneered at the venture.

You could at least have done it to collect money for Ethiopia."
True, but they don't really want boiled sweets and chocolate drops in Addis Ababa. Mr Maxwell would not approve of that.

In the end, Victoria's tricky haul will go to charity and not even on fireworks to celebrate Mr Fawkes's immolation. We doubt whether all the money demanded with menaces will go that way: a colleague was confronted as he parked his car outside his north London home by three big and burly masked youths on the same night. He assumed his tyres would be let down so he paid the extortionists 10p. He could hardly have given them a shortcake biscuit. And he expects they'll be round for Christmas, threatening to sing him a carol.

When we were very young we used to beg chewing gum from victorious American servicemen ("Gct any gum, chum?") but were never allowed to seek pennies for a guy and could sing carols only with the church choir when it did its rounds. Any attempt to trick or treat would have been brought to the attention of our parents, and we would have suffered a nasty curse.

CBI: HEALING THE RIFT

However much the CBI and its members may have celebrated Mrs Thatcher's election in 1979, it came too soon for the annual conference to have bedded down. Hit by the full force of the Government's adjustment programmes at the very moment when the world economy was descending into slump, British industry could not speak with a single voice, Erratic CBI leaderand a rift opened up with government that, despite an outbreak of election solidarity, was still embarrassingly apparent at last year's conference in Glasgow.

Events have helped to heal that rift. On the CBI's side, its member firms have had to make all those harsh adjustments. They are now recognising and reaping the benefits in an easier economic climate of prolonged recovery, although many firms in the West Midlands and elsewhere are still in desperate straits and the construction industry is starved of public sector orders. On the Government side Mr Nigel Lawson has, despite the rhetoric, subtly shifted the Government's priorities in favour of sustaining recovery through the lowest practical interest rates, if necessary at the expense of the pound (music to some CBI cars) and at the expense of improving on the pace of its targeted cuts in inflation. The public sector has so far, unusually, shown private industry the way in curbing the growth of money wages. And the Government has finally met industry's united demand for an end to the National Insurance Surcharge.

The rapprochement is therefore genuine. It will never become a true meeting of minds. The CBI's latest calls to the Chancellor, while containing much good advice, still betray the self-delusion of a disparate committee; Mrs Thatcher will never be able to think of her largely staunch industrial ally as "one of us".

It is therefore sad that the ship was unable to bridge the gap Prime Minister's question-andanswer session with delegates, billed for tomorrow as the highlight of the CBI conference, has had to be cancelled in favour of grimmer business in New Delhi. It was supposed to mark a symbolic healing of the rift, despite some anticipated tart questioning about unemployment and public sector capital spending.

Perhaps Mrs Thatcher's absence will accidentally allow the CBI to focus more closely on what should now be the function of this conference: to develop its own role within its membership in projecting the half-achieved reform of British industry into a full-scale resurgence based on improved competitiveness, improved techniques and a more expansionary frame of mind; projecting the practice of the best firms, many of them prominent in the CBI, to the mainstream of business. Holding the line on pay will rightly be at the centre of discussion, especially behind the scenes. It is too easy to forget that the sacrifices and productivity gains of British workers have, in different ways, been fully matched by our most serious competitors. Firmness is vital if we are to protect, let alone build on, our limited gains. Greater efforts need to be made to identify employees with the success of their enterprise through employee shareholding and management style, however depressing the current problems at Jaguar, an example to many businessmen, may seem.

Employers are already running up against skill shortages, most glaringly in electronics but also across the spectrum. As Mr Geoffrey Holland of the Manpower Services Commission bluntly pointed out last week, British firms lag behind their foreign rivals in attention to training and "will be to blame if tomorrow their workforces lack the skills they need." Much the same strictures can be applied to research and development.

It is also time that employers started playing a greater role themselves in boosting employment. They now have the cash flow and should grasp the nettle of risk. The CBI is already building on some fine initiatives in encouraging small business enterprise; which deserve the support of all members. Perhaps the more prosperous parts of industry' now need to match their determination never to return to yesterday's over-manning, with a greater dynamism in creating new business areas and product lines that will replace the jobs inevitably still being lost in the continuing drive to cut costs.

The business climate may not be ideal. It is better than for many years and as good a springboard as industrialists could reasonably hope for. It is time to get on with the job.

Opposition parties abstain when they consider that a government's possession of superior resources and its disposition to use them offer no fair chance, and that withdrawal will rob the victory of meaning and legitimacy. The Sandinistas certainly have the machinery: they have the army and the militia, the local committee structure, most of the press, radio and television, the censor, the rationing system, the youth organizations, the police and advisers from countries where governments never lose. They have lowered the voting age to 16. They are confident of gaining an overwhelming majority, despite their increasing unpopularity, against a divided, inexperienced and less privileged opposition. They are less confident about how much good this will do them if most of that opposition does not take part, or about where that will leave the country. They have made unsuccessful efforts to induce the abstainers to take part. The United States has encouraged them not to.

Abstention is not such an easy

But Nicaraguan conditions do not make for fair elections (elections are much more than mere voting, which is what observers usually observe). As the comdarison wili inevitadiy de made. there appears to be less opportunity for genuine political competition in Nicaragua than there is in El Salvador.

This is by no means just the result of a siege mentality, though it may be intensified by being under continuous pressure and attack. Similarly, the country's present economic ills are not all due to the United States boycott and the ravages of the contras: many of them are brought about by the economic models the comandantes have adopted. Peasants refuse to produce for controlled markets, shortages breed corruption. Discontent is met by increased controls, formal and informal, which the Sandinistas show little reluctance in inventing and applying. and any assistance to subverting its neighbours and send home foreign military elements. The argument is that without democratisation there can be no guarantee that Nicaragua will follow a peaceful foreign policy freed from ideological determinants. These elections by themselves will not suffice to end US support for the contras. If they a more nar Sandinista government then fighting may continue with even less shance of a peaceful solution than there is now. It is not clear how or when this will produce what the United States essentially desires, a reliably neutral Nicaragua. Tomorrow's elections are still worth some unofficial watching. There is still a little breathing space in the system, the government has attempted to recover from its failure to get much opposition participation by calling for a "dialogue" with all elements except the contras, and it has alternated its defiance of the Frited States with pro-fessions of its desire for an agreement and a cease-fire. "Dialogue" is a nebulous concept, but it is powerfully fashionable in central America and elsewhere in Latin America. Practical statesmen have - to consider whether the alternaare any more feasible.

DREDGING AT DEDHAM

The sound of water escaping from mill-dams, willows, old rotten planks, slimy posts, and brickwork, I love such things... I associate 'my careless boyhood' with all that lies on the banks of the Stour; those scenes made me a painter, and I am grateful. John Constable writing to his friend Archdeacon

That supplies one reason for keeping dredging machinery out of the river Stour in Dedham Vale downstream from Stratford St Mary. This is hallowed ground. It was his feeling for it that first raised Constable to become the master of English landscape painting. The sweep of the vale, the sky which is "the source of light and governs everything", were integral to the scene; but it is the micro-landscape of the river banks that Constable dwells on in that passage. It calls out to be undisturbed so far as continuing life and erosion by time allow.

A second reason for not proceeding with the scheme of the Anglian Water Authority to deepen and widen that stretch of the river is that the flood control it is intended to achieve might permit the riparian farmers to follow the line of profit and convert the permanent pastures bordering the river to barley or the dreaded oil-seed rape. That Constable liked a splash of colour in his landscapes and might have made something of the cadmium yellow of that alien crop is beside the point. Con- even remembered to reserve all.

The intermittent flooding of those pastures has been made worse by developments upstream which have added to the volume of water in the river. A scheme that has been on the stocks for twenty years or so has been dusted off and modified and is now somewhere in the town and country planning labyrinth.

The engineers have gone far to forestall aesthetic objections. Their plans entail no changes of water level, no straightening out of meandering, no interference with the ford at Flatford where the alternative of a contained flood-plain is proposed, few mature trees down, and saplings to be planted at the rate of three for every loss. Even reeds and weeds dug out in one place will be recolonized in another place along the stream. The joint planning authorities too are very conscious of where they tread and are at their most tactful. An agreement with all the farmers is poised in readiness whereby there would be no change of use from pasture for ten years, and notification for the next ten years to allow for management agreements inhibiting change in return for compensation (and by then, who knows, there may be agricultural planning controls in place for areas.

stable Country is as it is, not as it approval of the mixture of grasses chosen for reseeding where the spoil will have been

It is a scheme that embodies well the new emphasis on conservation and protection of landscape. It also shows the farming and conservation interests joined in mutual comprehension. It is a scheme one would like to be able to commend. Besides, it does not do to be too pedantic about Constable Country. He took liberties with it himself making the vale appear steeper than it is; widening the stream for The Hav Wain; positioning the tower of Dedham church with artistic licence; moving the mill-wheel at Dedham for effect.

And yet, there will be disturbance if the scheme goes ahead. The river banks will be raw and bruised for several years. Not all the good intentions might work out that way. Tillage of the willow-bordered pastures is made an option eventually, and public money is committed to an indefinite extent for the payment of compensation for not doing what ought not to be done. And what is it all in aid of? To extend the grazing season on 650 acres of permanent pasture, meant to be kept as it is. It is barely worth while even in narrow terms of agricultural output. In the sublike this, of "outstanding natural lime context in which the 650 beauty"). The planners have acres sit, it is not worth while at

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Putting people in Proper purpose of religious studies employment

From the Leader of the Social Democratic Party

Sir, Your editorial, "Forcing the pace on jobs" (November 2), is yet another depressing contribution which offers not a single specific measure to reduce unemployment.

You criticise me for having "rashly entered the numbers game" but how much more would you have criticised the proposals I put forward, first in Wales on October 14 and then again in the House of Commons on October 30, for budgetary reflation combined with firm monetary policy if I had not provided detailed figuring with an estimate of the net employment effect and the consequences for the PSBR? The modest and carefully costed measures I suggested would reduce unemployment by building mainly on existing industry and employment schemes managed by Government departments. You state that those demanding reflation pure and simple would be better employed finding common ground with the Chancellor on wages."

This overlooks the fact that an important part of what I proposed involves a general restructuring of employers' National Insurance contributions to reduce labour costs. and enhance the employment prospects of less skilled and lower paid workers.

You are right to declare that the Government has plenty of work to do, but it is very disappointing that you do not discuss more carefully those measures I suggested which the Government could be persuaded to implement. Yours sincerely,

DAVID OWEN. House of Commons.

Racism and police

From Dr P. A. J. Waddington

Sir, The Labour spokesman, Clare Short, is entitled to her view that racial discrimination should be a disciplinary offence within the police. What she is not entitled to do is to bolster her case by misrepresenting research findings.

True, the Policy Studies Institute report. Police and People in London. did find that the use of offensive racialist language was common amongst Metropolitan Police officers. However, as the authors of that report were at pains to point out they also found that these verbal habits were translated into discriminatory conduct only rarely. In this respect the report echoed academic research on the police published for the past twenty years.

Ms Short, and other critics of the police, may find it difficult to imagine that racialist sentiments do not spill over from language into action. However, there is nothing uniquely angelic about the police in this regard, for it is a common human trait for people to do one another in a different situation.

Yours faithfully. P. A. J. WADDINGTON, University of Reading, Department of Sociology, Whiteknights, Reading. Berkshire.

Maiden Castle dig From Mr F. H. Thompson

Sir, An unwelcome asperity seems to be creeping into the pronounce-ments of the heads of English Heritage (Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England). The reply by the Chief Executive, Mr Rumble (October 19), based one imagines on information supplied by his archaeological staff, to Mr Tatton-Brown's perfectly reasonable criticisms of the Commission's decision to institute fresh excavations at Maiden Castle (October 13) could have been more sympathetically phrased. As it is, it gave the unfortunate impression that English Heritage thinks it knows best and in its understandable desire to catch the public eye has decided to act without general consultation. The archaeological profession is populated, even over-populated, by articulate and intelligent men and women who will only accept that Maiden Castle is a good choice for further excavation after a thorough public debate on the merits of the proposal. The parallel is the current operation at the Sutton Hoo burial ground being undertaken jointly by the Society of Antiquaries and the British Museum, but only set in motion after prolonged and careful discussion within the profession. Yours faithfully, F. H. THOMPSON. The Tile House, Blacksmith Lane, Chilworth, Guildford, Surrey. October 20.

Famine in Ethiopia

From Mr Basil Davidson

Sir, Those who have watched at close hand the deepening dramas of the Horn of Africa over past years will salute the wisdom of your correspondents, notably Dr Griffin and Mr Hamilton (October 30), who have emphasised the influence of long-term political factors. Effective aid can now mitigate the worst sufferings of this drought, and deserves every possible and argent support, But emergency aid can be no more than a palliative.

It will be useful, if painful, to recall that the present catastrophe is a larger and more terrible repetition of almost comparable Ethiopian disasters of ten years back and, like them, has political as well as climatic or ecological roots. Without seeking to apportion blame, a search which could only hamper the transfer of emergency aid, we should consider how far international policies and attitudes can be influenced and reshaped, in relation leprons freak by assistants and often directed to a dingy hidden corner of the the whole Horn region, so as to offer some guard against further miseries in the future.

To begin with, realism must now insist that the existence and legitimacy of the autonomous administrations in Eritrea and Tigray, as well as the claims of other and substantial ethnic groups such as the Somalis of the Ogaden, will have to be accepted in any practical approach to the future.

Their resistance to Ethiopian government is a product of un-resolved problems of the Ethiopian imperial past and solutions are certainly not for us to attempt. But no long-term settlement within which relief or other forms of aid can be effective in the future will be possible without fully facing these

Much in the recent and present disasters of Ethiopia has derived, if indirectly, from external rivalries for influence in Addis Ababa, above all though by no means only between the superpowers. While emergency the following educational point.

Yours faithfully BRENDA G. WATSON, Director, Farmington Institute for Christian Studies, 4 Park Town. Oxford. November 1.

From Mr Nicolas Walter

Sir, Your leading article on religious education (October 31) represents an advance, but not a sufficient one. To summarize a long argument: this subject will become genuinely educational only when it ceases to be imposed by statute law and local bureaucracy and is put into the hands of the teaching profession; when it ceases to be a vehicle for any form of indoctrination or induction into any particular forms of belief and behaviour; when ethics and aesthetics are considered without supernatural inspiration; and when it is treated on the same basis as all other controversial subjects.

The problem is that the current anxiety about religious education has been caused by the recent appearance in our schools of large numbers of children from non-Christian families, although no one seemed to care about the previous existence of much larger numbers of children from non-religious families.

In the past such children have been faced with the unpleasant choice of either being withdrawn from religious worship and religious instruction or being subjected to offensive propaganda. It is high time to make sure that all serious views of the world - religious and non-re-ligious, political and non-political become the subject of genuine education for all the children in our schools. From Mr Mohinder Singh Dang :-Sir, June 5, 1984, was indeed a very sad day for all the Sikhs throughout the world. Indian Government ordered her troops to enter the holiest of our shrines, the Golden

Temple, on that day.

But let there be no misunderstanding that we, the Sikhs, consider today, October 31, 1984, even a sadder day for us all and for our country, India, when some fanatic idiot very ruthlessly killed Mrs India Gandhi.

Those very few Sikhs who shamelessly rejoiced at her assassin-ation are decidedly a tiny fraction of the Sikh community and certainly do not represent the vast majority of Sikhs who join the rest of their countrymen around the world to mourn this tragic and untimely death of one of the greatest leaders of the world and, without doubt, the best India ever had.

admitted them in 1907.

The MCC (with no cricketing connections) ran the first London to. Edinburgh trial in 1908; in 1909 it ran the first London-to-Land's End (and back) trial, when 15 hours were allowed for the journey in each direction. In 1910 the club ran the first London-to-Exeter trial demonstrate that motoring was also possible in the winter. The MCC continues to run these three road motor sport events; this year's Land's End trial, for instance, was the sixty-third and it attracted 350 starters - the maximum permitted by the RAC.

Tractors go on the beach to tackle oil pollution

By Tony Samstag

A week of trials for an ingenious method of recovering oil from polluted beaches after a spill is to begin on Thursday on Cefn Sidan Sands in South Wales.

The principle, developed by the Department of Trade and Industry's Warren Spring Laboratory, is one of those blindingly obvious ideas that might have occurred to anyone but somehow never did: to adapt readily available agricultural machinery, such as tractors, for temporary mopping-up service.

The laboratory says the purpose of the trials is "to test techniques for the recovery of stranded oil using agricultural vehicles with specially fitted rubber blades to push the oil against a barrier from where it can be lifted" using the "Springsweep" air conveyor

That system, normally used for oil recovery at sea, can also be mounted on a vehicle for use on land. Residual soiled sand will then be sprayed with a dispersant or lifted by mechanical excavator to a washing plant specially designed by Warren Spring scientists with a little financial help from the

Other experiments will test demulsification techniques for the water-in-oil emulsion resulting from the trials. Scientists will also assess the effectiveness of aerial spray-ing, remote sensing of oil on beaches, and the feasibility of building temporary roadway systems on soft sand. Preliminary trials last year on Pendine Sands had the advantage of a bard flat beach that presented fewer difficulties to the vehicles.

Pride, deadliest of the seven sins

in the currency of everyday language or pressed even to remember what they are. so for the benefit of others like myself I list them in their traditional order - pride, covetousness, lust, envy, gluttony, anger,

When transliterated into modern terms they have all the appearance of being as deadly now as they ever were. They still destroy families, pervert relationships, divide communities, provoke wars and corrupt the sources of human happiness. Pride stands at the head of the list, commonly regarded in moral theology as the deadliest of all sins.

True, the word pride does not often occur in speeches and articles and street-corner advocacy. What is more commonly heard is the term "loss of face". The fear of loss of face is just another phrase for pride. Some of the most calamitous conflicts in history have been caused by the pride of the protagonists unwilling to lose face. So even if pride were not the deadliest sin of all it is certainly one of the most expensive in terms of human suffering and social disorder. But it is a subtle sin, hardly recognized by those in the grip of it and sometimes not obvious to the casual observer. It may masquerade as a proper self-respect or a matter of principle or a passion for justice or ideological purity. The "proud" Pharisees were men of blameless life and intense piety, highly regarded by the people, but our Lord's criticism of them was more

It is against this moral background that we need to view two recent events. There is a charming little cameo in the Sacred Scriptures, seemingly remote from our time and circumstance, which now speaks to our condition. Jonah was a prophet of the eighth century of whom little is known, and he is the subject of the book of that name, dating from the Greek period C.300 BC.

It is the story of a man called of God to preach repentance to the Nineveh and flees in the opposite direction to Farshish, a place of uncertain location in the ancient world, but as far away as could be from Nineveh. But Jonah is waylaid by God. In a violent storm at sea he is cast overboard and is delivered by the kind offices of a passing whale to Nineveh. Then Jonah preached repentance as he had been commanded and, as a consequence, the people of Nineveh believed in God and the Living God. Jonah, it is said, was not amused or even gratified by the stupen-dous success of his sermon, the shortest sermon in recorded history. The importance of the book does not reside in its contribution to serious history. Rather it is a "tract for the times" intended as an amusing and sardonic comment on the "Church" of his day. By the Greek period Israel had become preoccupied with its own salvation and only peripherally concerned with the Nineveh after all was the capital of a nation, which was a byword for proud indifference to God and unspeakable cruckies to men. It was surely beyond redemption. But Israel had to learn the lesson that the church constantly has to relearn, that God is Lord of all the earth.

"He commends all men", St Paul says,
"everywhere to repent". The king of Neneveh was never one to lose face. That proud tyrant ruled the earth and, so he supposed, heaven as well. But he repented at the preaching of Jonah. If he could repent, there is hope for us all and that is probably the only hope there is.

In the morass of comment on the miners' strike and the Brighton bomb, there are only two firm standing points as far as my experience goes. One of them is the unchanging love of God for all creation. OBITUARY

MR GRAEME SHANKLAND Leading town-planner in Britain and abroad

Mr Graeme Shankland who died on November 1, aged 66, was one of the leading British town-planners of the post-war years. His contribution to the development of the theory and art of town design was out-standing, and he carried out notable work in London, Liverpool and the West Indies in particular.

Born in Liverpool of Scottish parents - his father was at that time the port's harbour master he was educated at Stowe and later entered Clare College. Cambridge, where he read architecture. His training was interrupted by the war, during which he first worked as a member of William Holford's team designing hostels for ordnance factory workers and later as an air reconnaissance officer for the Army in India and Burma. 🖇 the completed his training at the Architectural Association School and the School of Planning in London, In 1949 he joined the planning division of the then London County Council, where his work included the abortive new town of Hook and the planning of the South Bank. He remained with the LCC until he formed his own practice in 1962, becoming senior partner of the planning and architectural firm of Shankland, Cox Partners.

Only the first elements of his far-sighted scheme for the City Centre of Liverpool, his first commission as a private con-sultant, were realised with the fields of social and economic award-winning tunnel relief planning as in those of urban flyovers and the Strand Street, and landscape design. The Paradise Street complex. His "inter-professional team" was award some ten years later. Graeme Shankland travelled extensively abroad and worked in the United States, France, Yugoslavia, Iran, Africa and Jamaica, where his plans for the Kingston Waterfront and the resort of Ocho Rios are now a reality. His participation with French planners in the design of the new town of Cergy-Pontoise was a decisive influence in the shaping of its form and architectural character. Always deeply concerned about the future of our cities, in the late 1970s he led the team studying the problems of the inner areas in London which culminated in the production of the book Inner London: policies for dispersal and balance.

He devoted much of his later years to the development of his ideas on broader economic planning issues. He was particularly concerned with the growth of unemployment and with the future pattern of employment in an increasingly leisured society, joined the planning division of writing two books on the the Architects Department of the then London County Count

A man of wide cultural interests, Shankland was an accomplished draughtsman himself as well as a discerning collector. Professor Oscar Fritz Schuh, a specialist in Strindberg and and a director of both operas and stage plays, has died in Grossgmain, near Salzburg, at the age of 80.

Born in Munith in 1904, he was best known as an interpreter of Mozart, whose operas he staged in partnership with the conductors Karl Böhm and Josef Krips and the designers Caspar Neher and Teo Otto while on the staff of the Vienna State Opera from 1940 to 1945. His sense of clarity and fidelity to the score was the keynote of his productions, both during his eight years in Hamburg immediately before he went to Vienna, and in .Cologne, where he was Generalintendant from 1959 to

Lawful arrest irrelevant to breath test refusal

Bunyard v Hayes Before Lord Justice Watkins and Mr Justice Nolan [Judgment delivered November 1]

Whether a lawful arrest under section 7(5) of the Road Traffic Act 1972, as substituted by Schedule 8 to the Transport Act 1981, had been made was irrelevant in considering whether a person, even though he had not been driving had failed to provide a specimen of breath contrary to section 8(7) of the 1972 the 1981 Act.

The Queen's Bench Divisional

Court so held allowing the prosecutor's appeal against the decision of the Southend Justices on decision of the Southern Justices on January 5, 1984, who dismissed a charge against the defendant, Barry Leonard Hayes, of an offence contrary to section 8(7). Section 8(7) of the 1972 Act as substituted provides: "A person ho, without reasonable excuse fails to provide a specimen when required to do so . . . shall be guilty of an offence".

Mr Andrew Collins for the prosecutor; the defendant in person. LORD JUSTICE WATKINS said that the owner of a parked vehicle damaged by another car was told by the defendant that that other car belonged to him.

Police officers, in the course of their investigations [under section 8(1)] whether a drink-drive offence had been committed having spoken to the defendant and finding him obdurate, formed suspicions that he had been the driver. The defendant was arrested and refused to provide the requisite specimen of breath at

The opinion of the justices had been that if the defendant had been allowed to explain his case more allowed to explain his case more fully, the police would have been persuaded he was not the driver of

His Lordship said that owing to amendments to the existing law by the Transport Act 1981, there were circumstances where a person taken to a police station could be convicted of wrongfully failing to provide a specimen of breath although possibly wrongfully ar-rested, and even though he was not the driver of a motor vehicle involved in a road accident. for their opinion since they did not have the principles of the Divisional Court in Fox & Gwent Chief Constable (The Times, June, 25, 984) before them, with which case the present court agreed.

There was no suggestion of misconduct on the part of the police although they might have been wrong in their actions; nor was there any suggestion that the defendan had a reasonable excuse. The appeal, therefore, had to be allowed. Mr Justice Nolan agreed. Solicitors: Mr John J Goodwig, Chelmsford.

Remedying omission in adoption form

Practice Note Solicitors were warned of an omission in an adoption form and were advised what remedial steps to take by Mr Justice Hollings in the Family Division on November 1.

MR JUSTICE HOLLINGS pointing out the omission in Form 6 set out in the Schedule to the Adoption Rules (SI 1984 No 265) said that by rule 15 of those rules proceedings for an adoption order should be commenced by originating summons in Form 6 issued out of the processing Projector, Even 6 incorp. Principal Registry. Form 6 incorporated the words "heading as in Form 1" which was the usual form of words which constituted a summons and which was set out in full at the beginning of Form 1.

Accordingly, in all cases Form 6 should include that heading or commencement. However Form 6 as issued from the Principal Registry of the Family Division omitted that heading or commencement so that there was no effective form of summons of the other party to attend locurt. That omission might, if necessary, he regarded as an irregularity under Order 2 of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

His Lordship understood that steps were being taken to correct the form but in the meantime solicitors should take note and ensure that should take note and ensure that when they used, Form 6 they included at the beginning the words set out at the beginning of Form 1, adapting appropriately those words to the relief sought in Form 6.

affiliation order

Before Mr Justice Hollings

Hudgment delivered October 31) Clothing supplied by the father of an illegitimate child was for the support of the child and could be equated with a money payment for the child, Mr Justice Hollings held in the Family Division.

His Lordship allowed a mother's appeal by way of case stated from the Grimsby Justices' refusal to make an affiliation order under the Affiliation Proceedings Act 1957.

Section 2 of the 1957 Act provides that an affiliation order provides that an attituation order may be made "(1)... (a) at any time within [three years] from the child's birth, or (b) at any subsequent time, upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of the child has within the [three years] next after the birth paid money for

Mr Paul Genney for the mother, he father did not appear and was not represented.

MR JUSTICE HOLLINGS said that the mother had sought an affiliation order in respect of her boy born on March 8, 1981. The complaint was made on March 9, 1984 so that the mother was out of time under section 2(1)(a) by one day and had to rely on the provisions of section 2(1)(b).

The father had never given money to the mother for the child's maintenance although he had contributed half the cost of the pram prior to the birth. On the boy's first birthday he had given the mother a jumper and pair of trousers for the

The question posed by the justices for the opinion of the High Court was whether the present of the jumper and trousers could come within the provisions of the section so that the mother could have an order. Sir Jocelyn Simon, President, had. said in Roberts v Roberts ([1962] P 212, 216) "where it is proved that an illegitimate child forms part of the household of its father, there is prima facie evidence that he has paid money for its maintenance.". There was validity in those words. But in the present case the parties had not cohabited. The justices had gift and the presumption was that he had paid for the apparel. Food and clothing for a child were purchases made from payments for its maintenance and in the opinion of his Lordship such gifts could be considered as a money payment. The appeal would be allowed and the case remitted to the justices for assessment of the father's means and an appropriate Mr Genney had very properly brought to the court's attention the decision in Camrud v Hendrey ([1935] 2WWR 665) a case heard in Saskatchewan, Canada, In that case the father had bought shoes for the child but had not paid money directly to the mother and it was held that the gift was not within the Canadian statute which read "if the father has paid money for the maintenance of the child after its birth". His Lordship had not been persuaded by the decision.

The bird, a rare peregrine falcon stolen from the wild, had been found in 1982 as a chick hidden in the wing of an aircraft arriving in Munich from Britain. The species is virtually extinct in Germany, and some collectors and falconers are said to go to any lengths to obtain one. Smuggling birds of prey has become a highly lucrative business, a serious threat to conservation. Last month the police raided a farm in Staffordshire and seized unlicensed foreign species with an estimated black market value of £100,000. In the United States a series of court cases is uncovering evidence of an extensive worldwide smuggling ring allegdly involving members of the Saudi royal family.

When the stolen bird was returned from Germany, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds passed it to Dr Fox to train it to live in the wild - for hawks need to learn the arts of survival, from men if not from birds. This was a rare display of co-operation between hostile interest groups, for conservationists are divided on whether the ancient art of falconry, now enjoying a revival, is a threat or a safeguard to our birds of prey.

It is the most arcane of our blood sports, and the least satisfying to those with a lust for a bagful of mangled corpses, as I found this week, tramping round the small hills near Newent with Philip Jones and his immaculate Harris hawk,

George. Our hunt was not unlike a Stroll with a companionable, rather hungry and inconceivably mobile dog. George kept pace with us at a distance, trusting Philip to lead him towards the best spots for game. He was often out of our sight, though I doubt whether we were ever out of his, and now and then he would return to the ankles, wrist with a jingling of bells, to show he had not forgotten us. the woods for a live meal.

He made half-serious passes at a blackbird and a magpie which was being rather offensive, and struck down one small loyal, or eager for a caress. rabbit which never knew what hit it. But a whole week blazing away at hand-reared pheasants could not possibly have been as exciting.

I had first experienced the spell of birds of prey not long before, at the school of falconry run by Emma and Stephen Ford near Canterbury, when a buz-

Veering off her flight path like a hijacked airliner, Freya landed noisily in the upper branches of a tree and settled down for a sulk. She looked round at the dank English countryside and seemed to reflect that the world had changed for the worse since her ancestors were predatory dinosaurs in the primeval sunshine.

There was no kite-string to haul her down with and the tree was far too tall and flimsy to chmb. If she took it into her head to soar away for a circle or two, the wind might take her halfway across the county. She was free. There was nothing to draw her back to us but her own decision, and she glared out into the distance as if we were the worst kind of dirt.

"Whistle", said Emma, and I whistled as piercingly as I could, holding up my gauntleted left hand with a tender titbit, the head of a day-old chick. Freya looked down with eyes sharp enough to count the pores on my cheek. Then she lurched forward, spread her dark wings, and came at me low down over the turf like a flying hearthrug. This is the point at which beginners at the Ford's falconry school sometimes throw away the bait and run for cover. stood my ground, and the bird reared up, turning her wings to brakes, and lowered her talons onto my wrist. She seized the raw chicken-head and gulped it down; its beak squeezed open like a snapdragon in dumb protest as it disappeared, Surreptitionsly. I gathered the might pick up a few hints about jesses trailing from Freya's the recovery of lost budgies.

Every worthwhile sport has one central piece of magic in the case of falconry, it is the He cast his piercing eye the case of falconry, it is the incessantly round the skirts of force which brings a bird down out of the sky, back to the hand. It is a cold force, for a hawk is never tame in the way a pet is tame, never affectionate, or

l am a budgerigar man myself. I like to have small birds, different only in gaudi-ness from the cheeky ones that live out in the shrubberies, fluttering indoor to my hand for a taste of millet. One of my recurrent nightmares is that I have left a window open and the silly things go blundering zard called Freya decided in irretrievably out. I thought a mid-flight towards me that she did not like my face. irretrievably out. I thought a course in falconry might help to purge the dream, through

I had been rather surprised to find I could take a course at all. In the past, there were only two ways to become a falconer. The courts. principal one was to be born into it, the alternative was to try and learn it from books, mostly facsimile reprints of manuals corrent in the time of James L.

Today it is again possible, Falconry almost died out in on more than 100 suspects. Britain in the 1700s when the gunsmith's art improved to the point where it became worth-

How to handle a proud predator

A strong stomach and fine needlework are virtues in a falconer. Hawks are apt to ail, and constant vigilance is needed to see that they do not develop bumbletoot, snits, snurt, lethargy, mites, croaks and kecks, aspergillosis or frounce (the latter is invariably fatal). The trained eye can learn volumes from close study of the bird's daily regurgitations and their unforgettably pungent droppings. Handling such fierce and fragile creatures calls for constant care. An array of cords, swivels and feather straps is needed to tether and transport them; there is a special knot to learn, which can be tied with one's single free hand, and in principle untied too, if necessary with the help of the teeth. Much expense is saved by cutting and stitching the leather gear oneself from tanners' offcuts. Moulted feathers have to be carefully saved in case of breakages: they can be grafted onto the stump of the broken teather in an exceedingly fiddly eyeball-to-eyeball process known as imping. The other essential place of equipment for trader's plece of equipment for today's falconer is a deep-freeze filled with board-like rabbits and pigeons. Training a hawk demands patience. First the young bird has to be gradually taught to take food from you, then to hop to your hand for it. Then short flights can be made, with the bird tethered to a 100yd line, called the creance. When it is flying free, it can be trained either

Then at last you can go out to hunt the ecological consequences are seldom significant, as by far the most common victims are rabbits and souirrels.

Week-long courses for beginners are run by Emma and Stephen Ford at the British School of Falconry, Stelling Minnis, Canterbury, Kent (022 787 575). They will be held between February and July this season, and cost 2100 living out and £150 living in. Beginners train with adult buzzards, and advanced pupils majory with Harris Hawks. five special meanings. Strictly speaking, hawks, falcons and broadwings are all different. This is how you can tell them apart:

The film, and the book it is based on, have had an immense influence. A small manifesto of Falcons: Long-winged, fastinfluence. A small manifesto of flying, short-tailed. Chiefly disaffected boyhood, the story is rock-dwellers which hunt birds on the wing. Upright stance, urban, contemporary, astringent often hooded to keep them calm before hunting. Quick learners and thrilling fliers. The kestrel and captivating, it has immeasurably broadened the sport's appeal.  Hawks: Short-winged. tailed, chiefly nesting in trees and hunting in short sprints in woodland, taking prey on the ground or near it. Sparrowhawk take finches, thrushes; larger goshawk (still rare in wild) go for squirrels, rabbits and hirds. Both are prone to fits. The Harris hawk is an equable imported species wing and short-wing.

9 Broadwings: Bazzards and eagles. Slow-flying birds found in hilly or mountainous country, with rounded tails and wings. Buzzards are the best beginner's bird, tough and trainable, though their lack of aggressive spirit makes them lazy hunters. Eagles are majestic and moody: they hunt rabbit, game-birds, even fox.

Once there, we stayed at Sveti Stefan, the remarkable hotel that features in so many Yugoslav travel posters. An old fishing village on a tiny peninsula has been entirely converted into an hotel. The cottages have become rooms or suites reached via steps and alleys amid flowering shrubs. The restaurant, terrace and swimming pool have been cleverly blended into the old stonework.

It is generally regarded as a fairly tranquil, high-class place with bed and breakfast up to £70 a night in the high season. Our visit coincided with that of a large German group but the manager said this was excep-tional. The food and service were excellent (except for the impossibility of obtaining brown bread), the scenery lovely, the nearby beaches good and the water cool but swimmable in May.

Unfortunately the beautiful old town of Budva, just across the bay, is still closed for repairs to carthquake damage but will presumably open again soon. There are lots of other excursions, notably up to the old Montenegran capital of Cetanje. where the royal palace 19 preserved as a museum and the old British legation survives. All the hotels in the 1985 Good Hotel Guide, of which there are more than a thousand are intended to meet these criteria, but some offer really outstanding value. Last year, for the first time, we inaugurated an award for hotel excellence which we called a César after the greatest hotelier of our time, César Ritz. Our purpose was in part to define the wide range of excellence, and in part to help the dedicated individual hotel ier to survive and flourish against the formidable competition of the big battalions.

Our awards last year included one for "incomparable gran-deur", another for "matchless decor" and a third for "hauteur of cuisine". At the other end of the spectrum were accolades for best family hotel, best B&B in lown, and, nostalgically recalling the charms of Achamore

The clocks go back, the lights go on, the bills go up. But are you any more illuminated on the subject of lighting than you were a year, or 10 years ago? Compared with the rest of Europe we are still in the dark

while the Continent is bathed in the bright, white light of halogen, we are still hanging mob cap; shades round our central light fittings and retailers are doing very little to encourage, us to change our

Did you know, for instance, that this is Home Lighting Fortnight? If not, fear not the event appears to be operated on a dimmer switch. It is supposed to involve window displays and advertising by the 200 members of the Association of Lighting Retailers; but Woolworth, who are members, deny all knowledge of it, so there will be no emphasis on lighting in their nationwide branches.

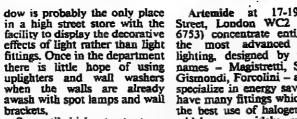

Perhaps the prize of £100 for the best window display is too small to attract much enthusiasm, but the promoters also suffer from the inherent pro-blems of the industry - little possibility of cohesive effort from innumerable small outlets and a dogged insistence on the part of the public to furnish their houses with fake Victorian fittings and bobble fringes.

Even British Home Stores, who built their reputation for good lighting on an advanced attitude to modern design, have based their Lighting Fortnight window displays throughout the country on pink and white coordinates and brass and glass. Their modern fittings have to be sought out in the depart-

This may be the way to sell more fixtures at the peak of the lighting season, but it is not the way to make an impact and planning to light a piece influence people, A shop win-sculpture or an entire house.

Light

Beryl Downing reports on an attempt to drag Britain out of the dark ages with some bright new designs for lamps their offices.

So until high street stores resolve the display problem, there will be no change in attitudes, except from those who can afford to go to a lighting consultant - but they are a small band in comparison with the proliferation of interior designers.

John Culien's showroom at 1

Woodfall Court, Smith Street, London SW3 (01-730 8585) is, as far as I know, still the only place in the country where you can see classic and modern lighting effects in the equivalent of a domestic setting. Certainly worth a visit, whether you are planning to light a piece of

Artemide at 17-19 Neal Street, London WC2 (01-836 6753) concentrate entirely on the most advanced Italian lighting, designed by the big names - Magistretti, Sottsass, Gismondi, Forcolini - and also specialize in energy saving and have many fittings which make the best use of halogen bulbs, which are widely used in European houses as well as in Halogen produces a very white light from a tiny bulb, giving more light for each watt than a conventional bulb and lasting a good deal longer. When a tungsten filament evaporates it becomes deposited round the bulb, burning and blackening it, but the introduction of halogen gas turns evaporated tungsten into a compound which is redeposited on the filament and reforms as tungsten. This process will only take place at extremely high temperatures, so the bulb, usually quartz as glass would melt, is made very small so that it is close to the filament to maximise the heat.

The light beam produced from such bulbs is narrow and intense – particularly useful for display lighting of ornaments and pictures and for task lighting – reading, or close handwork. In industry it is used for watch assembly.

The most imaginative use of balogen is in some of the uplighters to be seen at Arte-nide but Halogen has hit the high street, too. John Lewis branches have an interesting range of Italian uplighters and desk lamps in white, black or burgundy from £139 to £250 and their Kandido lamp is one of the most innovative designs you are likely to see in a countywide store group. It consists of two triangles - a base and a lamp head - supported by three extending chrome struts. The lamp can be tilted at any angle and the supports twist to hold it in position, making it an traordinary piece of decoratlengineering. lalogen is not the only cay saver. Philips have just lached a campaign to pro-m, their SL lamps, first induced in 1980 and since cold by other manufacturers. Thruse much less electricity than conventional bulb and last e times as long.

Buse energy saving has hithe had a yawn factor secononly to jogging, Philips are uphasizing the safety aspect being able to leave a light light n permanently in porche on stairs and in children rooms.

The 9 equals a 40 watt bulb, SL a 60 watt and SL25 a 100 wat All will fit into a standard schet, but they are very muclarger and heavier than a countional builb - I found bne o top-heavy for my table lam - so they are probably b. in a suspended fitting, aithen they are not beautiful to hold.

They cost £8.50 per bulb at John Lewis (which is a shock at first) but each will burn for 5,000 hours instead of the 1,000 hours from an ordinary bulb, using one quarter the electricity and saving on the cost of four extra bulbs.

Whatever new and different ideas are introduced, there will always be a market for period light fittings for old houses and traditional interiors.

Those who have managed to find a vase or base on an antiques stall or at auction and would like to have it converted into a lamp may like to know that this can be done at Liberty in Regent Street, London W1 for £20, any size or at Yardstick Designs, off Knightsbridge Designs, off (from £17.25).

in annual growth or a loss of that healthy glow one expects. In conifers one of the usual symptoms is the vast increase in the number of cones produced and the trees could exhibit resinous outcrops, as burrs, close to the base of the trunk. If shrub dies and is then followed by another next to it, the chances are the disease is about. It is not a quick killer and there may be signs of deterioration for two years before the plant dies. There is no real control except to fallow the ground and lift woody material from the soil Remove all "bootla bits of wood, root or branch and burn them.

Should a plant have been killed by honey fungus, don't replant immediately in the same area with other woody subjects. Use annuals or herbaccous plants as a stopgap to allow the disease to die out. This may take up to four years. Do not plant species which are known to be prone to attack from the disease. These include privet and lilac apples, silver birch, willows and walnuts. The conifers most at risk are Chamaecyparis, cedars, pines and monkey puzzle trees. Their soft woods do not last long where the disease is active.

If you must replace plants in the same spot try ash, beech, lime and oak trees. Shrubs that may resist the disease are holly, laurel and thorns, but also look at Elaeagnus, Mahonia, Rhus typhina and tamarisk. Climbers which seem to survive despite the disease are clematis and honeysuckle. Conifers safest to plant include yew, larch and

Colour control

Much is said about using builds to produce spring colour, but I think beds can be improved if there is a variation of plants. Spring flowering plants not only add something which is different to the beds, but also langthen the period when colour is available.

Make your bedding plane carefully, to ensure that the combinations of plants enhance each other. There is a wide range of plants to use which can all be raised in the garden. Seed is not sown at this time of year but plants will be evallable in gurden centres or

The most common spring bedding plant is the walfilower which is widely grown because of its scant. Colours are red and yellow, with off colours which can be made to fit into particular beds. Unfortunately many of the rid varieties "break" or become streaked with yellow due to a virus. due to a virus.

The most important introduction into bedding at this time of year are the new winter flowering pansies, unexceptional,

Under good conditions this rare plant will grow to 10ft and like many plants which are grown mostly for their fruits, they should be planted in groups, since single specimens rely look effective and as Symplocos does not set fruit from its own pollen, there need to be a number of plants to ensure cross fertilization. Although it is not classed as tender it does not like cold or wet areas, it particularly dislikes over-wintering in soil which is wet and heavy, but soil conditions are not critical, as long as it is well-drained and is not an extreme of the pH range. It is the moisture which accomp cold weather which causes pamage. An open site is necessary for the plant to ripen its wood and the more care expended in this respect, the better it will perform. The best method of propagation is from seed, but cuttings may be taken in July from semi-ripe lateral shoots. Seed must be sown as soon as it is ripe, and not left lying

For example, a simple "cut" usually implies a Parents - or at least those in change of scene; a "zoom" on a been seen and so on.

The author claims that techniques such as montage and close-up may not be understood by children under the age of seven; consequently they may get quite the wrong impression of what they are seeing.

Most parents will be able to think of examples of small children grapping with the images they see on the screen: the two-year-old who tries to grab hold of what be thinks is his teddy, the five-year-old who bursts into tears as a monster looms large. What we don't know, unless we watch all television programmes with our children, is precisely how they believe that, once a child has understood how to decode the symbolism of television and carned to separate fact from fantasy and fact from opinion, then he or she could be allowed to ingest a varied diet of television with few ill consequences. Unfortunately, Pro-fessor Marks Greenfield suggests with great authority, it ain't necessarily so.

Television reinforces stereotypes and can have an insidious influence on 'behaviour and beliefs. Watching a popular comedy series in which men are 'macho" and women feeble or flighty, may leave an enduring conviction that all men and women can be categorized in this way.

> One fina piece of advice from the author of Mind and Media: she says: "It is useful to remember that television seems to be especially influential in forming attitides and knowledge on topic with which the child lacks experience. Children who have a first hand knowledge of a topic make a clearer separation between the real world and the teevision world. Thus, parents can counteract television by giving their chil-dren first-hand experience in areas they consider important." In other words: "Why don't you just switch off your television and . . .

Gilded wonder boy and golden older men

No musician in the short but crowded history of jazz has received such lavish and sustained backing from a record company as Wynton Marsalis. The trumpeter, now aged 23, came to prominence during his teens as a member of Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers and has subsequently conquered not merely the jazz world but also the citadel of what jazz musicians call "straight music".

Marsalis has come so far so fast that he is already an object of suspicion among those who do not believe that a musician can have anything worthwhile to say unless he has paid his dues in obscurity for the better part of his professional career. Awards from the American recording industry for his jazz albums and for his recording of trumpet concerti by Mozart, on a colour-by-numbers canvas; Hummel and Haydn, bave the coda of "Stardust" finds simply confirmed the belief of pessimists that what we are for what seems like minutes as witnessing here is not so much the rise of a great jazz musician him. as the success of a carefully plotted marketing campaign.

Marsalis's latest effort is certain to harden that attitude. After proving his mettle as a small-group player and as an interpreter of the classical trumpet repertoire, be chooses to attempt a series of standard ballads arranged for trumpet and string orchestra, and the apparent conservatism of his decision is breathtakingly audacious. In 1984, after all, 23year-olds are supposed to be thinking new thoughts, are they ghastly concerto for quartet and not? What is this one doing performing "I'm Confessin" in front of an orchestra playing an arrangement that would not shock Mantovani?

Having a ball is what he is doing, and that is what the listener will have as he hears Marsalis turn "Lazy Afternoon" into a Moorish meditation of such tension and poignancy that the obvious comparison with Miles Davis and Gil Evans in their Spanish period seems irrelevant. That ravishingly pure tone is turned on John Lewis's "Django", jazz's greatest lament, like a master's brush him holding a single lonely note the strings die and fall around

THE WEEK Time trip to England's golden age

well's view of art in 1984 may been, there has been a cavalcade of shows this year all claiming to be more definitive than the last. "The Golden Age of Anglo-Saxon Art", which opens at British Friday, is the second "Golden Age" of the year, after the National Gallery's "Golden Age of Danish Painting". Going one step further back in time from the Romanesque exhibition at the Hayward Gallery this summer, it skilfully attempts to upstage that period as well.

The show is organized by the British Museum and British Library, working together in a truce which sounds rocky in itself. "We thought of having it some time ago, and suggested it to the museum", says Janet Backhouse, one of the organizers at the library, "but I expect by now they think it's all their idea". There is one point on which the two parties agree, that this is the last period of England's fine, indigenous style before it became tarnished for ever by foreigners with 1066 and the coming of the Romanesque.

The exhibition celebrates the 1,000th anniversary of the death of Aethelwold, Bishop of Winchester, and the centrepiece will be his magnificent Benedictional, from which we take our initial letter (above). It comes from the British Library collection and can be seen with sculpture, ivories and metalwork from 966-1066, a period never covered by an exhibition before.

Many of the names featured come right out of the mists of English mythology: King Alfred (whose famous Jewel can be seen in the prologue section, on loan from the Ashmolean Museum), King Canute, and Aethelred the Unready. It is often the way of history, however, that the lessknown names preside over the most productive periods. King Edgar, for example, who ruled wisely and peacefully from 959 to 975, had three remarkable bishops: Aethelwold, Oswald and

Dunstan, all great patrons of the arts. Five years after Edgar's death, under a monarch who is more famous today, Aetheired the Unready, the country was invaded once more

Most of the artifacts on show are religious and show a distinctive taste for lively, decorative pattern-making. In the manuscripts in particular, the modern eye, familiar with newspaper cartoons, can find much that is amusing: a sancer-eyed Christ, for example, peering out from behind a twitching arras, presumably in order to lend inspiration to the saint who sits with thoughtful expression and quill poised. The scribe Eadvi (known by name because he had the habit of signing his work) is seen eagerly prostrate before St Benedict, wearing a belt labelled "zona humilitatis", or "girdle of

The Harley Psalter (1010-1030) is particularly charming, packed with pictures as crowded as the chorus at the opera. Angels and men all have outsized hands which appear to wave. Al Jolson-style, and Leviathan has a corkscrew tail.

Equally amusing is a rare secular manuscript on the life of Queen Emma, wife of Aethelred the Unready. It is clearly an exercise in sycophancy, complimenting her at every turn.

The York Minster gospel book is, according to Miss Backhouse "alive and well and living in the twentieth century". The present Archbishop of Canterbury used it recently, and it will have to leave the exhibition temporarily in December to carry out its job.

Partners in the battle of the sexes

Films on TV

In the week of her seventy-fifth birthday (or seventy-seventh, depending on which reference books you believe) there are two chances to savour the talent of the formidable Katharine Hep-burn, in each case with her favourite screen partner, Spencer Tracy. They made nine pictures together, starting with Woman of the Year in 1942 and ending with Tracy's last, Guess Who's Coming to Dinner, a quarter of a century later. Their fans will forever argue over which was the best but a strong candidate is the comedy Adam's Rib, made in 1949 and showing on BBC2 on Monday (6-7,35pm). They play husband and wife, both lawyers, whose blissful marriage comes under strain when they find themselves on oposite sides in court, Adam (Tracy) takes on the prosecution of Judy Holliday for the attempted murder of her hus-ounsel for the defence. Written by the real husband-ind-wife team of Ruth Gordon who is enjoying an Indian summer as an actress) and negation of cinema but few sustained them better than Hepburn and Tracy. Their other film this week is directing, it was made in 1942 and has Tracy as a reporter investigating the death of an American hero with a guilty secret and falling in love with his widow (Hepburn).

After the comic fireworks of Adam's Rib, it is a more solemn piece executed with polish and of interest as a reflection of the anti-fascist strain emerged in Hollywood after the Garson Kanin. Adam's Rib is the lesser known Keeper of the United States's entry into the an astutely crafted battle of the Flame (Channel 4, Thursday, 5- Second World War.

BIRDWATCH: Tony Soper and Roger Lovegrove are the hosts for the fifth annual birdwarch presented by the BBC Natural history Unit. This year the cameras are on the estuary of the River Exe in south Devon. There are three live programmes, BBC1, tomorrow, at 11.50am-12.05pm; 1.45-2.05pm; and 3.40-4.05pm; with recorded highlights on BBC1, 11.05-11.40pm.

THE TRIAL OF RICHARD III: Did the future tking Richard really murder his two young nephews in the Tower of London in 1483? With Lord Elwyn-Jones, the former Lord Chancellor, as judge, the case is argued before a jury in a studio reconstruction of the Old Balley's court number four. Historians and forensic experts provide the evidence and the programme is introduced by the Duke of Gloucester, a descendant and patron of the Richard III Society. Channel 4, tomorrow, 8.15pm-midnight.

AUTOMANIA: The first 100 years of the motor car, and man's obsession with it, are examined in a 13-part series by Julian Petitier. As he points out, the relationship has always been two-edged, for those cherished machines are also the potent agents of injury, death and poliution. ROCK & JAZZ

Passion and provocation TOUGH TENORS Tonight and Mon to Sat, Ronnier Scott's Club, 47 Feith Street,

Why on earth could Ornette Coleman (above) not have contented why on earth count Ornerse Coleman (20002) not have contented himself with going gently into his later years, resting on his his incontestable reputation as one of the handful of great jazz improvisers? With the introduction of Prime Time, his seven-piece "electric" band, in the late 1970s, he scandalized many of his admirers quite as profoundly as he had shocked the whole jazz world on his first appearance 20 years earlier, when he proposed a many of playing lazy which enemped conventional hyperstales. way of playing jazz which snapped conventional harmonic structures.

Just as some people still find the early quartet records outrageous, so Prime Time will probably go on polarizing opinion as long as people still listen to jazz. What is not in doubt is the passionate beauty of Coleman's alto saxophone solos, blending a fierce rhythmic charge with a lyricism that now sounds positively benign. He is at Logan Hall, University of London, 20 Bedford Way, London WC1 (387 9629) on Monday at 6.30pm and 9pm.

London W1 (439 0747) Johnny Griffin and Eddie "Locklaw" Davis share not merely a mastery of the tenor saxophone but an ability to make every note sound freshly mixed from the mother loce of lazz.

A good tale of who, what and where

Oliver claimed that the plot for She Stoops To Conquer, involving mistaken identities of both people and place, was based on an incident in his youth in Ireland when he was directed to a private house believing it to be an inn.

He ordered food and wine at this "inn", and it was provided by the family of ther local squire, owner of the house. Goldsmith discovered his embarrassing situation when he asked for his bill the following morning.

Giles Block, who directs a new production of the play which opens at the Lyttelton Theatre on Thursday, takes the view that the story was more likely the product of Goldsmith's fertile imagination, told good tale likely to amuse Dr Johnson and others whose company he kept in London. True or not, it inspired the plot of one of the "most wonderful" of English comedies.

She Stoops To Conquer, enormously successful since its first performance in 1773, is a favourite in provincial theatres but has been rarely performed in London in recent years, and this production too began out of

Sphinx-like Rowland walks away from Harrods

It is hard to overestimate the significance of vesterday afternoon's announcement that Lonrho has sold its 29.9 per cent stake in House of Fraser, the nationwide department stores group which boasts Harrods of Knightsbridge as the jewel in its crown. A six-year battle of unprecedented bitterness has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion for all sides, as was duly reflected in the rise in both companies' share prices in the wake of the Lonrho's explanation of its decision is all too easy to understand. On Wednesday it learned that the Mo oplies and Mergers Commission had been given leave to extend its investigation into House of Fraser for another three months, Mr Paul Spicer, a Lonrho director, has described this as the last straw; it must have been like running 25 miles of a marathon, only to be bold the course had been extended by an extra five miles.

Unbeknown to the world at large, an offer was lying on the table from the immensely rich Egyptian Al-Fayed family which would take Lonrho out at a respectable profit. The temptation to pick up that offer has in the event proved

There have been signs for several months that Mr Roland "Tiny" Rowland, Lonrho's chief executive and dominating influence, was willing to consider a facesaving deal. Thanks to the at times unbelievably determined resistance put up by Professor Roland Smith, House of Fraser's chairman, the situation had reached a stalemate with no prospect of conclusion.

The conflict was taking up a disproportionate amount of management time on both sides, and both companies were being prevented from reaching their natural objectives. In the end, a prize which had originally seemed to be worth almost any sacrifice had come to be hardly worth the candle.

The outcome for Lourho is straightforward. Mr Rowland has exchanged his thwarted ambitions for £138.5m of cash which is already earning interest. It will help to offset the company's net debt of £567m. But in the longer run it is likely that Mr Rowland, whose energy has never been in doubt, has identified some more interesting potential havens for such a sum. The early indications were that his eyes were turned towards th US.

In contrast, Lonrho's departure leaves a number of questions over the future of House of Fraser. For he first time since the days of Lord Fraser of Allander, the company is in the hands of strong and unshackled management. It can now have no excusse for not improving the performance of Fraser's sleepier provincial outlets, and there is no reason to suppose otherwise. Above all, they can. soread their wings at the strategic level. One possibility must be that the present teentative trading link with Hambro Life will be consolidated into something considerably closer, perhaps even a full Hambro Life's Mr Mark Weinberg would be a considerable asset as the retail sector stands on the verge of a revolution in the marketing of financial services.

The questions must surround the eventual intentions of the Al-Fayed family towards their investment in House of Fraser. They have described it as a longterm investment, but that is an over-used and off-betrayed phrase in the world of bids and deals. Although they have held some investments for long periods and they have a business background stretching back for a century, they have also been known to play pass the parcel. Most notably, this happened nearly 10 years ago

Sailing into unchartered waters

An accountant is an accountant is an accountant, to misquote Gertrude Stein, except of course when he is chartered. Then he acquires a status approaching that of a protected species. At least this is the impression with the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales gave yesterday, in reaction to the news that its arch-rivals, the Association of Certified Accountants, had been granted the right by the Privy Council to prefix its name with the word "chartered".

It would seem that although the association as a body can call itself chartered the individual members cannot Any certified accountant caught taking the word chartered in vain has been threatened with an injunction. The association (or Chartered Association, as it is now known) has gone to great lengths to reassure its chartered brethren that this abuse will be actively discouraged among its members. A spokesman said soothingly yesterday: "Some of our members are quite happy to be called certified".

This appreciation of the sanctity of the chartered accountant doubtlessly helped the Chartered Association's case for the name change when it was heard by the Privy Council. When the Institute of Cost and Mangements made a similar attempt last year to change its name to the Institute of Chartered Management Accountants, the request was turned down.

Although the institute has a Royal Charter the suspicion that a chartered management accountant might be mistaken for a bona fide chartered accountant was enough to ensure rejection.

As if to emphasize the distinction, the English, Scottish and Irish institutes of chartered accountants have just formed a committee of cooperation where they will discuss matters of mutual interest. Several old jokes come to mind.

Star chamber seeks New Owen attack further £1bn saving on JMB

Lord Whitelaw's ministerial 'star chamber' appointed to rein back public spending for next year to the Treasury's targets, has made some progress this week. However, a gap of £1 billion -£1.5 billion remains.

The star chamber will have one more session with the main spending ministers early next week, befor public spending goes before the full Cabinet on Thursday.

The star chamber has had further sessions with Mr Michael Heseltine, the Secretary of State for Defence, and the excess bid from the Ministry of Defence is now below £200m. This gap is largely as a result of differences of opinion on inflation factors next year.

Electricity and gas prices, and the question of whether a "Scargill surcharge" should be applied to fuel bills from next April, remain to be resovled. Mr Peter Walker, the Energy Secretary, has argued that any such surcharge should be decided only when the strike is

Unit trusts are generally thought of in terms of long-term savings and so the above figures, showing how quickly our Scheme has out-performed a building society, will probably come as a surprise to most people.

CAPITAL GROWTH, PLUS A GROWING MONTHLY INCOME.

Our Monthly Income Scheme is made up of four of our historically high-performing trusts, plus one more-recently kunched trust with a high-income return from the outset.

Payment dates bring a welcome cheque to investors each month.

The Scheme's aim is not just for a good income which increases over the years. It also aims for long-term capital growth.

With a building society, you cannot have

To get capital growth in a building society's higher interest account you must reinvest your interest; in which case you have no income. But if you take your interest as income, you cannot have capital growth. Your £5,000 will only ever remain worth £5,000. (Indeed, with inflation, it becomes worth less each year.)

how money put in our trusts has kept growing in both capital and income value.

THE LONGER YOU SAVE, THE BETTER. Over the last 5 years, for instance, average income growth was 60%. Over 10 years, 129.3%. From a building society, your income has actually fallen over the long term. Building societies have always been at the mercy of fluctuating interest rates.

You should remember, when considering unit trusts, that the price of units, and income from them, can go down as well as up. Past performance is not necessarily any guide to future growth.

GRE raises non-smoker discounts

Guardian Royal Exchange Assurance proudly announced on Thursday that it was raising its non-smoker discounts on life policies for the third time since introducing them in 1981. The discount then was only 10 per cent; it is now being raised to a full third of the premium. The definition of a non-smoker remains as anyone who has not smoked a cigarette for the last 12 months - convenient for cigar and pipe smokers who thus qualify as non-smokers. The move is clearly beneficial to GRE policyholders, but how much more competitive does it actually make GRE's policies in comparison with the best quotes on the market? Comparisons can be difficult but for a GRE mortgage protection policy of £20,000 for a male aged 30 the minimum nonsmoker premium is £36 per

But a policy of £10,000 more (though for a man of only 25) with Equitable Life, currently the cheapest in the market, costs a mere £21.70 per year and that is without a non-smoker's discount. The next best quote is Economic Assurance with a yearly premium of £24.20 on a £30,000 policy for a male aged 25. Even with its new discounts, GRE may not be the

Six choices

A new investment bond being offered by Provident Life Association this week provides a choice of six funds – including PLA's unit fund.

Performance is the keynote of all

Performance is the keynote of all unlitized insurance company investment schemes and on this score the latest plan, Plusbond, from Provident Life could be worth white. The existing Unit Fund, which is a managed fund, has been outperformed by only two others and has turned a £1,000 investment made in 1979 into £2,322 over the five-year period. Into 22,322 over the inverses period.

If Provident Life manages to maintain this performance on its new investment plan then it could be worth looking at.

Courting disaster

The title Predicting Corporate Fallure, for the latest publication in the Institute of Chartered Accountants Notes for Chartered Accountants Notes for Businessmen series, is not likely to appeal to the optimistic entrepreneur. The idea behind the book, that many disasters could be avoided it only the proprietors and managers spotted the danger signs in time, is a good one. But they could have chosen a better title – "Avoiding Corporate Failure," perhaps. The book contains examples of various monitoring systems and proposes that they be used to cross-check each other to provide an indication of the financial position of the company. "Notes for Businessmen" are to their clients in small businesses, says the institute. It would be interesting to see the reaction from a client when the accountant hands over a copy of

Sheffield winner

Sheffield Building Society, which pays a massive 11.5 per cent on its children's regular savings account (provided a parent or grandparent has investments with the society), is launching a sevenday notice account which puts it up with the market leaders.

The new 20+ account will pay 9.85 per cent net of basic rate tax for amounts of £20,000 or over. Details from Sheffield Building Society, 65 Campo Lane, . Sheffield, S1 2EG.

Bank charge details

That item on your bank statement which usually says notiting more than "charges" will be a little more informative in future if you bank with NatWest.

It is introducing a detailed breakdown of account charges on customers' statements – presumably in response to complaints received when it raised charges and imposed £3-a-quarter "maintenance charge". More than 5 million personal customers have current accounts and of these 55 per cent pay account charges. The breakdown will start on statements issued after the third week of December.

Guaranteed income

Investors with £5,000 or more can earn 9.35 per cent net of basic rate tax on Pinnacle Insurance Compnay's latest guaranteed income bond. Unlike a building society account, the interest rate on the new Pinnacle Income Bond does not vary during the five-year term and is guaranteed.

With the possibility of a decline in Interest rates, now might be the time to lock up these high returns. Investors with £1,000 to £5,000 earn a slightly lower return of 9.2 per cent basic rate tax paid.
As with all income bonds, higher rate tax payers will have a further tax liability.

Details from Pinnacle Insurance Company, London Chambers, 3 Cork Street, London W1X 2LQ.

Help with heating

Fear of debt forces many elderly people Fear or cent forces many elegaty people to economize on heating – sometimes with total effects. To help the elderly make the most of their resources, Age Concern has produced a booklet, Heating Help in Retirement, which provides guidance on installing a heating system, or making improvements to the existing one.

It also looks at ways of conserving it also looks at ways of conserving warmth by draught-proofing, grants available and methods of getting the work done. Fuel-saving is dealt with, as well as eating well to keep warm, sources of help to pay heating bits, the fuel boards' code of practice on disconnexions, methods of payment, how to read a fuel bill and explanations of the various tariffs.

out any of the extra strings.

As long as you keep £1,000 in your account, you receive 9.50% net annual interest. What's more, you receive the full rate every day, whereas with some societies it only amounts to the equivalent after a whole year's investment. You can also withdraw money on demand, without paying any penalties. This rate is variable, but not linked to the Ordinary Account Rate.

Should your balance fall below £1,000, you still receive the nominal Ordinary Account Rate.

Thefts and burglaries are costing insurers £3 for every £1 received so premiums are set to rise considerably

Nearly 250,000 people who insured the contents of their houses with the Prudential are likely to be looking for a cheaper deal when their policies come up for renewal.

swingeing increases of up to 100 per cent on its premium rates for house contents policies in several inner city areas. But this came after smaller increases on contents policies by Norwich Union and Commercial Union.

A number of other large insurers are expected to raise their rates before the end of the car. So wherever the potential customer looks, he is likely to find house contents premiums considerably higher than a year go.
The main reason given by the Pru for its rate increase was rising crime, causing a thumping underwriting loss running at twice last year's level. In some inner city areas thest and burglary are costing the com-pany £3 for every £1 it receives in premiums.

For the industry as a whole the picture is little better. The British Insurance Association calculates that theft claims alone cost insurance companies £156m in the first half of this year - 12 per cent more than the first half of last year.

Faced with losses like these it increases is not surprising that premium rates are beginning to rise. Legal and General is likely to be the next company to move. At present its highest risk rating is £9.50 per £1,000 of house contents. But from December the excess, the amount below which it will not pay up on theft claims to unprecedented high levels: £100 on an ordinary indemnity policy and £200 on a new-for-old policy.

And perhaps of more long term significance, the Pru has given a warning that it might get tough on its assessment of claims. It could, for example, refuse to pay out the full amount if it judged that the claimant had not taken basic precautions to keep thieves out

It might even scale down its payments if the policyholder is under-insured in the first place. Insurance companies are

So are the insurance companies thinking up methods of reducing their policyholders' premiums? Most of them say they cannot find an effective way to do it. One suggestion is to introduce a no-claims bonus system, rather like car in-surance.

But insurance companies insist that there is no comparison between house contents latter can usually be avoided by careful driving, they say, but there is very little anyone can do to keep a determined burglar out of a house.

Likewise, few companies offer discounts if clients fit burglar alarms to their houses. say the companies. And any way, at £500 or £600 a time a burglar alarm probably costs discount. The Pru has come up with one suggestion. Anyone who excludes theft cover from his policy gets a reduction of up to 40 per cent on the premium But since it is increasing theft that is forcing rates up, this is hardly much comfort to house

BUSINESS EXPANSION SCHEME

Investment down to a fine art

An art gallery has set itself up as a business expansion scheme. so taxpayers can invest in art with the help of the taxman.

Investors in Connaught Brown will be backing the dealing judgment of Mr Anthony Brown, aged 29, a solicitor turned art dealer.

Mr Brown intends to build up a market in British and French Post-Impressionists from 1885 to 1930 in the £5,000 to £25,000 price range - which means the minor work of major artists or the less well-known artists of the period.

And although investors will have the comfort of knowing that their investment is backed by the paintings that the gallery buys, the business intends to make profits by trading.

Mr Brown said: "It is not our intention to build up a collec-tion and liquidate it after five

The gallery is leasing first floor premises just off Bond Street and will have about four openings a year. Investors will be invited to previews, lectures and discussions, and receive a newsletter. They will also be encouraged to use the gallery's framing and restoration

The company, whose launch is being sponsored by the stockbrokers Savory Milln, aims to raise £800,000 but will get off the ground with a minimum of £300,000.

The minimum investment is £500 and the offer, which opened yesterday, continues until December 11. The brokers have timed it so that investors can consider Connaught Brown before and after the British Telecom share sale,

The company intends to pay 2 5p (5 per cent) dividend after three years. This will be voted shareholders who, probably being higher rate taxpayers, may prefer the money to roll up in the company funds. Connaught Brown is projecting pretax profits of £239,000 on a turnover of £1.075m after three years if the maximum subscription of £800,000 is raised.

The money raised will in- ally, to take the company to the Unlisted Securities Market, but probably not immediately the five-year business expansion scheme period is over.

Under the BES, taxpayers get relief at their highest rate on investments which qualify for the scheme. Thus an invest-ment of £500 would only cost £200 net for a 60 per cent taxpayer, £250 for a 50 per cent taxpayer and £350 for a basic rate taxpayer. But you are locked into your investment for five years to reap the tax benefits and may have difficulty finding a buyer for a stake in an unquoted company.

Warning on home packages

Building societies could offer homebuyers a complete package of services which would be welcomed by many of their clients. But consumers must be protected from conflicts of interest which might develop particularly if estate agency services were offered, said Mr Jeremy Mitchell, director of the National Consumer Council.

The possibilities of conflicting interests are real and serious. Building societies would be acting for the seller of a house and the buyer. As agents for the seller, a building society would have a duty to obtain the highest possible price. It would also have a financial interest in getting the highest possible price - its commission would be bigger".

"The building society's duty to the buyer and borrower and its interest in an accurate valuation of the house as security for the mortgage, would point in precisely the opposite Safeguards suggested by Mr Mitchell include a requirement for a building society to put a separate price tag on each of the component parts of its house-buying package. "This would mean, for example, that the consumer could compare the building society's charge for a structural survey with what he or she would pay to an independent surveyor.

Building societies should also be prevented from compelling borrowers to use the society's chosen solicitor or conveyancer.

Miss Croft rises exuberantly to America's challenge

By Rex Bellamy, Tennis Correspo

Britain and the United States broke even on the first day of their Wightman Cup contest, sponsored by Nabisco, at the Albert Hall on Thursday night. Chris Lloyd put the US ahead by beating Anne Hobbs 6-2, 6-2 but Annabel Croft then defeated Alycia Moulton 6-1, 5-7, 6-4 in a match that had a tremulous climax - in fact, two such.

The programme began with a colourful, speciacular and (for the players) emotional opening ceremony. A pessimistic colleague waspishly forecast that this reverberating razzmatazz would probably be Britain's best performance of the evening. Gazing at the famous areua for the first time, an American friend once observed that brought "tiers" to his eyes. On this occasion, it briefly brought tears to the eyes of the American reserve. Gretchen Rush.

Unfortunately for Britain, the pomp and ceremony were succeeded by an irresistible demonsuration of the exemplary tennis that has made Mrs Lloyd one of the great players of the game's history. She was dressed to kill and, in a sense, she did kill. At the end of the match, as at the beginning, Mrs Lloyd looked ready to go to a ball - except that her dress was rather short for the curroose.

Sequins gave a sparkle to the stars on the United States flags that formed mock pockets. A halternecked outfit exposed rippling detold muscless soon on active service as she thumped swinging drives to the corners to keep Miss Hobbs on the run. Mrs Lloyd's anticipation and footwork meant time to spare. So she had time for a belanced set-up, with the racket drawn back early. Then, controlling the racket head with facile assurance, she used with length and width of the court with a precision subtle variations of pace, too.

Miss Hobbs could not have worked harder. She persistently attacked, as she had to. But her services and approach shots were seldom good enough to justify anything but apprehension when' she reached the forecourt. She was repeatedly passed - or forced into nging errors on the volleys. By the end of the first set Miss

By the end of the first set Miss Hobbs looked like a refugee from a wet, stormy night. She reminded us not that she needed to - that she is a bonny fighter, ready to run until she drops. But she was fighting out of her class. The public did not make much noise. The only break points of the third set occurred at three-all, when Miss Moulton began with a double fault and served two more to lose the game. This time Miss Croft seized her chance. The youngest player in either team had opened the door for Britain.

England's pack can tie the Wallabies down and give Melville a lift

With a tinge of good fortune, today's game against Australia at Twickenham will mark a fresh start for England. Victory is important, particularly after an unhappy winter and a somewhat inglorious summer, but in the long term - and this is the first of six games before next May's short tour of New Zeafand - it is more important that this new young side establish some confidence and Remove Carleton and Pearce. and inexperiene of international Rugby runs all through the team. Nor have they had the chance to work together, save at yesterday's training at St Mary's College, Strawberry Hill. Melville must cope with captaincy feet in the international arena. It is a daunting prospect.

Apart from the fact that England are at home, many of the advantages lie with Australia. The large proporation of their team played through three internationals against New Zealand during the summer, and have had three weeks of touring together to iron out any

It may not have been the most successful three weeks a touring party could wish for, containing a defeat, a draw, and a rather inconsequential high-scoring game in the space of five matches. But they have been living and training together, able to try out different combinations, and, with England having to come from so far back in their search for a viable international side, the odds ought to be in favour of Australia recording their seventh win in 11 meetings with

However, England have been shown very clearly by the South and South West Division and by Cardiff that if the Australians can be tied down at the scrummage and the maul, they are far from world-beaters. That may not make for the most attractive of games, but England's objectives at the moment are limited. They need confi-dence in each other's ability, and if they can place a win of kind on top of that, they will have done remarkably well.

They should be able to control their own destiny at the scrummage, and collect a reasonable proportion of lineout ball. The loose play will be interesting, not only because of the back-row combinations involved but because a New

Kelso's first big test of season

Another significant feature has been the relative eclipse of the norm-east; where Gosforth have dominated for so long and, only last season, West Hartlepool headed the merit table. As for West Hartle-pool, cynics may attribute their decline to a sudden reduction in All three of Selkirk's inter-New Zealand's emigration statistics.

On one subject there is complete agreement, in the north anyway: the Edinburgh Academicals. Rutherford merit qualifying table is a shambles. merit qualifying table is a shambles.

Arsenal.

Manchester United returned to championship form at Old Trafford last night soundly defenting their title rivals Assenal with the help of two goals from Gordon Strachan. However, United may claim record compensation from the Football League, for television contributed to a poor attendance of 32,279, about 20,000 below the average home gate. The loss of one Robson, Stewart, was almost immediately underlined by the other, Bryan. When Moran nodded back Strachan's corner in the fourth minute, Arsenal were missing the bite that is so characteristic of their missing youngster. United's captain showed enough of it to clear the confusion and put his side ahead.

But for the energetic Talbot, Arsenal's midfield was relatively toothless. Since Lukic — who has yet to recover fully from a kneeder.

Robson again, Moran, and specially Hughes, should have enlarged United's lead, as the flow drifted inexorably towards the Stretford End. Yet the atmosphere. the one feature of the game that the vision can never satisfactorily convey, was curiously subdued. It was as though the Mancunian audience feared that the tide might

And so it did after half an hour. Bailey had previously been disturbed only by a long-range effort from Woodcock which he scooped awkwardly past a post. But, as his defensive colleagues hesitated, he was suddenly faced by the lonely. Allinson and could do little to Allinson and could do little to prevent the equalizer.

It stirred United and, in particular, Robson, who first stretched Lukie with a header and then himself in an effort to reach Strachan's low cross. But within five minutes Arsenal had taken the lead. A centre from Nicholas, curied not quite as neatly as his hair, was glanced in firmly by Woodcock.

That unexpected blow was to lift United and especially Strachan even higher after the interval. Rix, whom form for his club has declined so notably that he was later replaced by Adams, assisted them in the forty-eighth minute. FOOTBALL: THE FORGOTTEN ARMY FIGHTS BACK AFTER 15 YEARS IN THE CHAMPIONSHIP WILDERNESS

Everton's hungry march to the title that millions cannot buy championship. You might argue that any season is a bad season. What I mean is that for the club who believe there are always the pick of the bunch, but have failed to prove the point for the past 17 years, there has seldom been a more average level of rivals. After two and and half months there are no conspicous favourites: not even United themselves, I suspect, for all their talent, for all their blisteringly attractive on-days that they contrive to efface by embarrassingly hiccoping off-days.

Two defeats by Everton over four days, resounding one in the League followed by one at home in the Milk Cup, thanks to Gidman's own goal, told us perhaps more about United's prospects between now and April than Everton's.

It must be frustrating for Ron Atkinson that the expenditure of millions on Robson, Moses. Gidman, Strachan, Brizil and Olsen has as yet brought United no closer to a chance of the title than has Howard Kendall's astute organization of a team costing six times less.

Everton, who are at home to Leicester today, give all the indications that, far from two Cup finals last season being flashes in the pan from an almost forgotten clob, they are at last building. In the seventy-ninth minute, after a side capable of disputing who reigns on Sarasom was bedly dispossessed in Merseyside. There is a regular, predictable midfield, the ball found its way to pattern to their play, a combination of hardness and flexibility "which makes them contenders for the first time in 15 years.

They have in Peter Reid one of the most dependable midfield players in the game, who imposes the same tactical authority as Herton used to do for Brighton. Reid is supported by the used to do for Brighton. Keed is supported by the promising under-21 caps, Steven and Bracewell. Up front the mobility of Sharp and Heath, another under-21 cap, poses problems for most defences; the centre backs, Ratcliffe and Mountfield, and Southall in goal, form the tincleus of a sound defence. Without any extravagance, or the equivalent accuracy of passing, Everton are gaining a little of Liverpool's style.

could do with less talent and more organization, They may be generating a turnstile profit which creates a share dividend worth £70,000 to the chief executive, Martin Edwards, but on the pitch the opposition's net is not bulging quite so handsomely. They lack pattern.

What, for example, on the midfield flanks is the role of Strachan? Are they under-exploiting Olsen? How are Brazil and Hughes intended to play off each other? Is it really the intention that Moses should get forward as much as, or, even more than, Robson, the goal-scorer? Is suyone sure what Gidman is going to do with the ball when he overlaps? Is Gidman sure? These are matters which Atkinson needs to draw together if United are not to continue to have those on-and-off days in which the central defenders, Moran and Hogg, are yet lacking maturity. The departure of Wilkins seems to have had the effect of puting more defensive responsibility on Robson. I Cannot belp feeling that United will remain more of a good spectacle

Spars, conceding fewest goals among the leaders, have the same cachet as United, flair rather than consistency.

Like Spurs, West Ham will remain good to watch, but as ever you wonder whether the imaginative touches of Stewart, Alien, Goddard and Pike can see through a long winter. Arsenal will not lack endurance but, with Marineer having seen his better days, they may suffer too many draws when they deserve to win.

I have not seen Sheffield Wednesday yet, which some of those who have suggest is a bonus. Howard Wilkinson has organization spilling over the brim but has not yet allied it with entertainment. Nottingham Forest, still exhibit-ing the thoroughness of all Brian Clough's teams even without star names, will not be far away but may lack goals. With six months to go my tip on present evidence would be Everton or Arsenal.

David Miller

Change is as good as test for Spurs provided a virial clue as to who will win this season's North London championship, and, who knows, the League championship too, come May. It was made by Tottenham Hotspur and involves a simple exchange of places between Hoddle and Hazard, with the former taking up the position on the substitute.

The significance is Hazard is a greater midfield genius than Hoddle; it is simply that Tottenham, unlike their rivals Arsenal, are able with their ample squad to make such changes without any discernible upset to their chythm.

On Wednesday evening, against Liverpool, Hazard came on to replace Hoddle, who had been steering Tottenham with all the aplomb of his majestic past. Quickly and the aplomb of his majestic past. Quickly he was the steering total matter.

The idea of dropping or even substituting Hoddle when in such form would have led to outrage in the press, if not in the Hoddle household, before his Achilles tendon injury. Now it is accepted as a necessary sacrifice in the attempt to raise a championship-winning team. With Hoddle suspended from the return leg of their UEFA Cup tie with FC Bruges in midweek, it also aids consistency. Peter Shreeves, the aids consistency. Peter Shreeves, the Tottenham manager, explained "Glen has had two hard matches and I thought that packing in a third would be too much in too short a space of time." Don Howe, the ham's opponents today, also can ili afford to be without the likes of Statham, Grealish and Valentine, who all missed the bruising Milk Cup midlands derby at Birmingham in midweck. The trio will have late fitness checks.

fitness checks.

Liverpool must jealously eye Tottenham's midfield wealth. A visit to the Pottries against Stoke City is viewed with considerably more trepidation than it once was, even with Stoke firmly rooted at the foot of the first division. Liverpool, who are still unsure of the fitness of Daiglish's knee, yesterday lost Gillespie, their new central defender, with influenza.

Stoke, for the first time in two months, have that celebrated if largely untried duo, Mcliroy and Hudson, back in tandem. Another famous name from the past, that of famous name from the past, that of Cordagn, will take over in goal from the injured Fox. Having previously been on loan with Norwich and Brighton, Cordgan is doing as much Brighton, Corrigan is doing as much mileage as a hire car.

Everton, who confidently expect to hold up the city of Liverpool's end in the championship stakes, hope to have Sheedy fit against Leicester City, although judging by what they did to another title challenger recently without him, the need cannot be so great. The possible loss of Leicester's leading goalscorer, Lineker, will be of much goalscorer, Lineker, will be of much greater importance to the side Eastoe once with Everton, could make a welcome return after bieng cup-tied for the defeat at Luton.

Michels returns

Rinus Michels, who guided the Dutch team to the World Cup finals of 1974 and 1978, was recalled yesterday as the national trainer in place of Kees Rijvers. Michels, who created the idea of "total football", takes over a side which has been much criticized recently, particu-larly after last month's 2-1 home defeat by Hungary in a World Cup

RACING: TOM SHARP PROVES HIS CESAREWITCH TRIUMPH IS NO FLUKE WITH ANOTHER NEWMARKET VICTORY

Miss Kuta Beach to reap rich Autumn harvest

Cataldi will have an excelent chance of winning the Autumn Handicap at Newmarket today if he runs anywhere near as well makers Zetland Stakes. Trained seasonal debuts. as he did over today's course and distance in the Champion Stakes, in which he finished fourth, about two lengths behind the winner. He was in the field that day only as the pacemaker for his stable's first string, Raft, but it was only towards the finish that the was collared by the eventual winner, Palace Music, Pebbles and his stable companion.

However, it may be wise to turn a blind eye to that performance as it was far and away superior to anything that he had ever achieved before and as such, perhaps, a flash in the pan. Also Cataldi had a very hard race that day.

In recent years Haul Knight and Miramar Reef also ran in today's race against a similar background and each let their supporters down. So I am looking for the winner to come from a short list comprising Holsten Export Lager Handicap Portlaw, Promised Isle and Chase just three days after their exciting duel at Ascot. This time, though, they may both have to give best to Kilbrittain who won the race 12 how well Miss Kuta Beach went in a gallop a week ago with Wylfa and Miss Saint Cloud, So Ascot last month she is in fine fettle again now. His preferred now to Promised Isle stable is certainly in fine form. who was far from disgraced in

Now his Hill House have excellent chances of stable are confident that he will relish the longer distance of today's race because he has clearly inherited an abundance of stamina from his dam, Odeon, who had good form

over 12 and 14 furlongs.
Cole is also hopeful that Jenny Goulding will win the Dickins Invitation Stakes for him on Ace of Spies, who was only beaten a whisker in his latest race at Ascot. But I just prefer John Dunlop's progressive filly Park Parade, who has won five of her last six races and may still be ahead of the

At Sandown, Little Bay and Kyoto will turn out for the Castle, who won the race 12 months ago. Injury then kept him off the course for the rest of following that good win at last season but he is said to be A Kinsman (1.30) and Derert likely Orchid (2.30) are my fancies for absence.

No matter how Kyoto gets on, his trainer, John Jenkins, have excellent chances of winning the Embassy Premiere Steelplechase (qualifier) and the Ken Jones Memorial Hurdle, respectively.

The way the High Renown ran in the race won by Statesmanship at Newbury eight days ago more than hinted that he has improved from last season. Since last term he has changed ownership, changed trainers and been gelded but he is very well handicapped today. Peter Easterby had a choice of three races for his progressive young jumper Cybrandian today so the fact that he has chosen the Wighill Handicap Chase at Wetherby speaks for itself. Canny Danny can benefit from Cybrandian's absence in the next race, the Supermaster Handicap Chase. John Francome did not ride at Sandown vesterday because he felt unwell and has given up his five booked mounts at Towester this afternoon as well, but Playboy (1.0) and Primrose Wood (3.30) still look likely winners despite his

Cup not fixed say police

Australians breathed a sigh of relief this weak when police amounted that the nation's most famous horize race, the Melbourne Cap, had not been fixed in 1980. The race was probed after a forest high-ranking police officer said he suspected jeckeys had boxed in one of the heavily-backed puggers.

The winner was Beldale Ball, an 11-1 shot owned by Robert Sangster. Tweive bectes suffared interference during the race, but a stawards insurer charact all jeckeys.

After the all clear from the notice, the 22 jeckeys in the 1980 Cap insured a writ for libed datasage against the officer who made the claim, a former director of the Australian Bureau of Criminal Intelligence.

The newspaper beadlines which amounced the probe last month were an added blow for the Australian racing industry, which had been disturbed by a blatant substitution in a Brisbane race earlier this year.

Police have still to lay charges an outside with a borse that came in first and was backed for millions of dellars estimation.

Racing is big money in Australia, and the largest flutter goes on the Melbourne Cup, which has its 124th running on Tuesday.

Melbourne Dawson fights back with first double

Steve Dawson, the 21-year-old Lancashire-born apprentice, who nearly became racing's forgotten rider of 1984 after nursing a broken leg for five months, continued his fightback with his first-ever double, on Perion and Tom Sharp, at Newmarket yesterday.

The head victory on Tom Sharp in the Marathon Handicap was a particularly sweet result for Dawson, proving their Cesarewitch, Dawson opened up a two furions fead and cruised home by six lengths on the 40-1 Melton Mowbraytrained gelding. This time, Tom Sharp carried a 3tb penalty, started 11-4 favouritis, led after six furions and garnely held off Baby's Smile by a based.

O'Neill in the wars again

John O'Neill was taken to Harrogate Hospital with a broken left arm and missed a winning ride on Bucko at Wetherby yesterday only just back after a hip injury. O'Neill was in the front rank when the 5-2 favourite Goosey Gander crashed at the last, with Mr Denetop sprawling all over him.

O'Neill, lying motionless for a while, was brought back in the ambulance, breathing a painkiller inhaler. Victory went to Eboracum who swept through to beat ATS Prince by five lengths:

BLINKERED FIRST TRIE; Howmerket, 1.15

Half an hour earlier, Dawson launched his double with a strong late finish on the Epsom juvenile Perion to take the Potter Nursery by a length. That continued Brian Swift's vintage year. "That's 27 one of my best - but easily my most successful for prize money. I've a 50 per cent strike rate with my two-year-olds, and I'd be at Doncaster next week with my last 1984 runners, Prince Hab and Bond Dealer", the Epsom trainer said.

Rapide Pied stops Boutin

Francois Boutin's seven-year domination of the Critrium de Malsons Laffite came to an end venerately when his candidate Solstein was beaten a head by Rapide Ped, Desmood Stonelson write. Third place in the group two event went to New Bruce who had just a nose to spare over the former English trained Dreams To Reality. The English challenger Addents. English transactions and the English challenger Addenbrooke did not line up for the seven rooke did not line up for the seven rooke did not line up for the seven found furlong race as he had been found cast in his box. This afternoon's Prix de Flore might go to the inexperienced, but fresh Diya who carries the colours of the Aga Khan and who will ridden by Yves Saint-Martin.

Getting the Montessori message

Montessori nursery school is focussing attention on a burgeoning prethis century by an Italian doctor.

Montessori nurseries are booming. The Maria Montesson training organisation in Hampsteam knows of 40 schools in the London area whose 'directresses" were trained in Lvndhurst Gardens. The current list of private nurseries produced by the Independent Schools Information Service for London postal districts south of the Thames lists 13 out of 46 schools as Montessori. These include the Battersea Montessori, The Barnes Montessori and the Kingston Vale Montessori.

Even ordinary nurseries (those without Montessori in their names) use the famous Montessori equipment and some of the approach. Why has it become so popular with both those wishing to teach tiny tots and with parents prepared to spend £325 a term, mornings only, for their threeyear-olds to be educated in this way?

The answer to the first part of the question is that well-brought-up young ladies with a decent education five O levels and an A level are desired) regard such a training as more of a challenge than Cordon Bleu. It is certainly more chic (Princess Diana set the pace) than many of the alternatives and for a young woman with energy and ambition it offers the opportunity to

Parents look for quality care

Why are parents flocking to put their children under a Montessori directress? Mrs Hilda Patell, director of training at the Maria Montessori training organization in Hampstead. thinks it is because parents are looking for quality care. They are more discriminating now than they were, more aware of child develop-

"A few years ago they were looking for schools which taught their children to read and write. Now they want their children to be independent and to have a good social adaptation right from early life."

The public has a choice of three Montessori training centres - St Nicholas in Kensington, the London Montessori Centre and the Hamp-stead organization, which is part of the Association Montessori Internationale. It is not clear exactly what philosophical disputes lie behind the three-way schism, and the Hampstead centre, which claims to offer the authentic Montessori training, is coy about the splits.

All Mrs Patell would say was: "For us it is not so much a matter of showing people what to do with the equipment but preparing them to be > with children. We demand that the individual change in order to work with a child, not just to learn the techniques.

For this reason the Hampstead college does not run correspondence courses (the other two do) and it is about to inaugurate a system of registering schools which are run by its directresses. In order to belong to the Association Montessori Internationale these schools will have to fulfill certain criteria and maintain

What is the Montessori message which these schools are seeking to perpetuare? Mrs Patell explained that the Italian doctor observed that children liked to do everyday things, such as washing up or scrubbing a table, which were not associated with children in the public's mind. Mareover children liked to do these things again and again. Dr Montessori decided there was a purpose to this. Children needed to do these tasks for their own development, for example, to solve problems and learn coordination_

She realized they were building the possibility of ordering and organizing their own lives, of making sense of what interested them through work," said Mrs Patell. In effect she hit on the obvious conclusion that children learn through doing. Adult-centred education therefore had to go out of the window.

The good doctor also observed that younger children learnt from older ones, often better than they did from adults. So she felt children of different ages should spend the day together. Her aim was for children to be selfreliant, independent and selfdisciplined.

Her equipment was developed to enable children to learn to coordinate their movements, and eventually to write and read through concrete experience of handling objects. She also emphasized learning through the senses - smelling, touching, tasting and so on.

This popular and condensed version of Montessori's ideas may sound old hat to a modern audience because so many of them have been absorbed into our accepted wisdom of educational theory. A visit to a Montessori school, however, shows clearly how these ideas are put into

At the nursery in Hampstead, which exists beside the training institution, a group of 30 children. aged three to six, were occupied, mostly on their own, with bricks, painting, beads, numbers and so on. The room was very quiet though the children were able to move around to return a piece of equipment to its place or to find something new to do. Miss Jean Nugent, the directress, said the children chose what they wanted to do. Two little girls poured milk from a jug into cups and drank it. A boy undid and did up buttons. A girl pinned wet rags onto a clothes

One swarthy toddler told another: "Something beautiful is happening today". He repeated it a little more loudly to the assembled company. Miss Nugent told him not to shout. His beautiful secret was revealed in a scene worthy of a Hampstead nursery when a tiny girl in rust-coloured tights appeared with a minute violin which was learning to play by the Suzuki

"Before Hedda begins I think everyone should have their bottom on the floor under them," said Miss Nugent Everyone obliged Hedda played Twinkle Twinkle Little Star and her classmates loved it.

After a little sing-song it was back to more "free activity". Before using a piece of equipment the toddler would unfuri a felt square on which the said equipment would be placed. The point of this ritual was territorial. The children were staking out their patches from which others were to

Finding a family atmosphere

A child began to cry suddenly and noisily. To my untutored eye she looked as though she needed a cuddle. I was told she had spilt water on the floor and refused to mop it up. She did not get a cuddle. Instead she wandered round the room dabbing at a paper handkerchief and looking

The scene at a neighbouring nursery - St Mark's Square nursery school in Primrose Hill - was quite different. Run by Sheema Parsons, it uses an eclectic thix of approaches, including Montessori. There was more noise, a great deal less structure and more of a family atmosphere. It was Tuesday, the day on which the music teacher visited to play the guitar and sing songs with the children. At first they gathered round her in a semi-circle. One boy soon decided to move away and play in a corner, whereupon a handful of others followed. There was no pressure to stay with the music teacher. Although Sheema Parsons uses some Montessori equipment, she rejects the Montessori package as being too rigid on the grounds that children have to fit in with it rather than it with them. The free play approach looked tougher on the teachers. Which is best for the children, of course, a matter of

continued from page 1 to open it. They started breaking the double glass window in the door." As they broke in, four young men yelled: "Are there any Sikhs in here?" Someone answered: "There are none" - and the here?" boys started to get down. But another group got in and searched the compartment.

"They shouted: "We've found one," Mr Bhatia said, and everyone got up to watch. "I could not see, but I could thear blows being struck. They they dragged him the length of the carriage by his long hair.

After the youths got the Sikh out of the carriage, passengers saw him being beaten, "Suddenly there was a stench of burning flesh," Mr Bhatia said, "I saw flames and smoke, and I glimpsed a body burning. I hoped he was dead."

The father and young son of the Sikh family emerged from the lavatory in which they had been hiding. "Someone gave him a pair of scissors and said: "For God's sake, cut your hair"," Mr Bhatia said. Mr Bhatia said.

"This was an important thing for a Sikh, but he went back into the toilet and when he came out, both he and his son had cut their hair, and he had shaved off his beard. We sat there for three more hours, but no one gave the family away."

While these events were taking place, there were some moderately hopeful signs here. Peace committees were formed in a number of areas as local inhabitants clubbed together to protect their Sikh neighbours.

Mr Chandra Shekhar, president of the Janata Party, went on a peace march through Bhogal and Jangpura, industrial suburbs of south Delhi, where earlier in the day Sikhs and Hindus had been stoning each other from rooftops.

Meanwhile, more than 30 world leaders have arrived for Mrs Gandhi's funeral today.

Those who have arrived include Mr Nikolai Tikhonov, Prime Minister of the Soviet Union, and Mr George Shultz, the US Secretary of State. Mrs Margaret Thatcher is expected this morning. Princess Anne, who is already here, will represent the Queen and then return to London, cutting short her Save The Children Fund

Misery of the long wait for famine aid

Famine victims, huddled together at a relief camp in north Ethiopia after fleeing drought areas, await for food and medical aid.

From a Staff Reporter

Cardinal Basil Hume, Archbishop of Westminster, said yesterday that he would fly to Ethiopia tomorrow for a five-day study of famine and aid efforts. Accompanied by two officials from the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development (CAFOD), he will take an aid donation from Christian Aid and messages of support from Dr Robert Runcie, the Archbishop of Canterbury. "Ethiopia and its tragedy is now part of everyone's conscience. It is also very necessary for us to find out, on the spot, why there seem to be such delays and confusion in getting help to those who are suffering so much," he said. Two RAF Tristars chartered by British Airways were due to fly out last night and today carrying up to 30 tonnes each of high-energy biscuits, national Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources in Madrid; departs Heathrow Airport, clothing, polythene sheeting and other supplies.

Three more RAF Hercules transport planes were also scheduled to depart for Ethiopia last night to join three which left on Thursday. With another Hercules set to depart in the next day or two, the planes will make up Operation Bushel, ferrying aid supplies within Ethiopia.

A Boeing 707, carrying 32 tonnes of grain for the famine victims, is due to leave Gatwick this morning. The flight has been organized by Mr Oliver Walston, a Hertfordshire farmer, as part of his Send a Tonne to Africa campaign, an appeal to farmers to donate part of their harvest to starvation relief.

The idea is that, when they sell their grain, they should instruct the buyer to pay part of the money to the appeal.

After a slow start, the campaign has gathered momentum and is raising about £25,000 a day. By yesterday the total had reached nearly £360,000.

But Christian Aid said last night vast numbers of famine victims in northern Ethiopia would not receive aid unless the Government in Addis Ababa allowed free passage to areas affected

"The international community is "The international community is turning a blind eye to what is going on in order not to jeopardize other relief operations, but the needs of vast numbers of people in these areas will not go away," the charity group said.

It said it liad received more evidence that the war against rebel guerrillas in Eritrea and Tigre was still going on. An international aid worker had confirmed that 42 civilians were killed and 92 wounded in a 90 minute air attack by government MIG aircraft on a village in Seraye province, Eritrea, on October 2.

More than 10 days after the BBC broadcast its harrowing film of famine victims dying at Save the Children Fund's feeding station in Korem, cheques, postal orders and cash are still pouring in. "We are going flat out and we are expecting to go flat out for another two weeks anyway," the fund's chief accountant Mr John Eke, said yesterday as he watched his team stack In Geneva, the United Nations said Africa's huge refugee population had risen to unprecedented levels. Figures showed that more than 140,000 people have recently fled from famine and war. Home photograph, page 2

Manhattan almost stops for Mondale

Mr Mondale attracted a crowd of 100,000 cheering Demo-crats in the clothing district of Manhatten as this last full week of the long campaign drew to a close. Or possibly it was the other way about. Perhaps it was a crowd of 100,000 cheering Democrats which attracted Mr Mondale.

It was reported that for days in the Mondale-Ferraro New York campaign headquarters everything, including winning the election, had been subordinated to ensuing a good raily. Various Mondale strategists were quoted as saying such things as: "The rally is an attention-getter. It will play all over the country. It gives us momentum and notoriety."

The event is an ancient tradition of the final days of Democratic election campaigns. In American terms, that means it goes back to

In that year, Roosevelt addressed a crowd on his way to inflicting the first, and less famous, of the true defeats suffered by poor Dewey, the Republican whose far worse experience at the hands of Trueman in 1948, when he was supposed to win, is the precedent on which Mr Mondale now sets all hope. So the International Ladies'

Garment Workers' Union, the organizer of the rally, was set to work. This is the body romanticized in so many books by liberal historians of the Roosevelt era which ended the sweatshops in which poor immigrants laboured, and which doubtless made a lot of poor immigrants unemployed

The union discharged its responsibility well, Confetti rained on Mr Mondale. Much of Manhatten came to a hait. Taxi drivers cursed in many languages. Enthusiasts climbed the lamp posts. Uniformed lorry drivers, arriving to collect ladies garments, climbed the wall. All was as it should be.

Local arbiters of such matters ruled that in spreading five blocks from 35th Street almost to 40th Street, the rally was second in size only to that for Mr John Kennedy in 1960, which covered six blocks.

It was said to be twice the size of the rallies for Mr Carter in 1976 and 1980. Mr Carter was no great friend of old unions such as the garment workers. That could explain why, once at least, he won.

Such figures as Mr Sol C.

Chaikan, the president of the union, pronounced them-selves satisfied. It was "historic" they agreed. Certainly, it must have been the first time a Norwegian has attracted a crowd of 100,000 including even in Norway, certainly in Manhattan.

Mr Mondale and Mrs Ferraro mounted the platform on Seventh Avenue to be greeted by the Mayor of New York City, Mr Koch, and the Governor of New York State, Mr Cuomo. Mr Koch and Mr Cuomo shook hands with each other and, one was assured, continued to loathe each

Mr Mondale denounced Mr Reagan for denouncing him for not denouncing anti-semi-tism in the form of the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Mr Mondale said he had fought anti-semi tism throughout his life. All and the denunciations of antisemitism, were apparently traditional to the city's polithe teeming citizenry con-tinued to go about the fulltime business of being cynical and unimpressed by anything that happens in their city.

Mr Mondale's rally looked magnificent on the evening television news. But it would have to compete with late night television shows entirely devoted to psychiatrists assist ing New Yorkers who tele-phone in with more pressing problems than politics. "Go and see a urologist," a typical psychiatric reply goes,

OK, you want me to see a neurologist." "No, a prologist."

Silence at the other end of

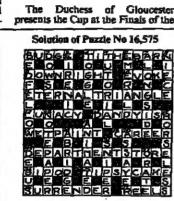

Furthermore, Mr Mondale may have had a great success by promising a fair deal for men who make ladies garments, doubtless as Roosevelt did in 1944. But in 1984 this is a city so sophisticated that it is more concerned, if these television shows are anything to go by, with ensuring a fair deal for men who wear ladies
